THREE CENTS

Police Net Closing On June Robles Kidnapers

Beer Bottles and Calling Card Furnish Fresh Desert Clews.

Letter to Moeur Key to Mystery

Why Abductors Gave Up Ransom Collection Also Puzzles.

Tucson, Ariz., May 16 (AP).—A painstaking study of the desert dungeon in which 6-year-old June Robles was kept chained 19 days was made today by authorities in the hope her kidnapers left clues which might lead to their apprehension.

Aided by sketchy descriptions furnished by June, police and sheriff's officers took up the hunt with renewed effort in the belief that arrest of one or two of the kidnapers was not far off.

Detectives and fingerprint experts examined minutely every article found in the grave-like pit on the desert, from which June was rescued Monday by her uncle, Carlos Robles, and Clarence Houston, Pima County attorney. In or around the underground prison they found, among other things, two beer bottles that appeared not to have been opened long, part of a package of cigarettes, and a personal calling card.

Study Mystery Letter.

Authorities gave close attention to the anonymous air-mail letter which was received Monday at the office of Gov. B. B. Moeur in Phoenix and which contained directions for finding June. They expressed the opinion the letter had been mailed from here to Chicago and remailed from that city.

With disclosure of the contents of the ransom note delivered to Fernando Robles, June's father, two hours after the kidnaping April 28, and part of the contents of a second note, it became known that the father, in seeking to establish contact with the abductors, four times had driven his automobile within sight of the heap of cacti and mesquite brush that concealed his daughter's tomb-like prison.

Why the kidnapers had not attempted to collect ransom from the father—$15,000 had been the price placed on June's life in the first note—officials could not explain.

Given Detailed Orders.

Detailed instructions for payment of the ransom were contained in the original letter.

"You must follow this," the letter said. "Get a car as told, put a sack in the seat, and drive the route until you come to a white cloth being dragged across the road in front of your car, then pitch the sack of money right at the cloth beside the road.

"Don't stop, don't speak, don't change or dim the lights, don't blow horn, don't give any signal, drive slow, be alone, don't have a gun."

"Listen, you," the note warned, "follow our orders and don't be nervous. Drive where you are told, and you and your child will not be hurt. Tell the officers to let you alone."

2 Touhy Aids Go to Prison

Long Terms for Robbery End Dynasty of Gun Gangsters.

Ashville, N. C., May 16 (AP).—Long prison terms given Ludwig (Dutch) Schmidt and Basil Banghart today were believed to have marked the overthrow of the machine-gun dynasty of Chicago's "Terrible Touhys."

Convicted in United States District Court of participating in the $105,000 holdup of a Charlottee mail truck last November, Banghart was sentenced to serve 36 years, and Schmidt, 32.

For the latter, it apparently marked the end of a criminal career which began soon after his arrival in the United States from Germany 22 years ago. He will serve his time in a Federal prison to be selected by the Attorney General.

Banghart, "The Owl," one-time master of a great beer racket in Chicago, and rated as one of the Ace Touhy machine gunners, will go back to southern Illinois penitentiary at Chester, where his Federal term will run concurrently with a 99-year sentence for his part in the kidnaping of John (Jake the Barber) Factor.

Twenty-five minutes after the jury received the case today, it reported a verdict of guilty on all counts of the indictment, and Judge E. Yates Webb passed sentence immediately.

County Attorney Clarence Houston (left) and Chief of Police C. A. Wollard, of Tucson, Ariz., are shown examining the hole in the desert where little June Robles was held for 19 days while her family negotiated with her kidnapers. The hole, lined with boards, was covered with a piece of tin and heaped over with cactus. June was rescued May 14. No ransom was paid.

Fourth Man Is Sought in Gettle Case

Armed Police on Hunt; Two Women in U. S. Indictments.

Los Angeles, May 16 (AP).—Sheriff's deputies set out today to find a fourth man suspected of participating in the William F. Gettle kidnaping, while the Federal Government announced it intended to see that three men already sentenced remain in San Quentin Prison the rest of their lives.

Heavily armed, deputies left the sheriff's office for an unannounced destination simultaneous with the disclosure that a fourth man was sought.

The Federal grand jury indicted James Kirk, Larry Kerrigan and Roy Williams, the three men already under life sentences, on charges of conspiring to use the mails to extort in the $60,000 ransom scheme which failed. Conviction on these charges, officials pointed out, would circumvent parole of the men on the State sentences.

Also indicted on the conspiracy charge were Joan Burke and Loretta Woody, companions of the kidnap trio.

The State's district attorney at the same time took steps to bring the

Mrs. Piccard Hurt as Winds Down Balloon

Stratosphere Training Flight Brings Forced Ontario Landing.

Detroit, May 16 (AP).—Mrs. Jeannette Piccard, who hopes to be the first woman to pilot a balloon into the stratosphere, had a bruised arm tonight as a souvenir of her initial experience drifting in the clouds.

The handsome, vivacious mother of three sons, who are at home in Wilmington, Del., took off at 5:15 a. m. today from the Ford Airport, Dearborn. With her were husband, Prof. Jean Piccard, who will make scientific observations on their excursion into the stratosphere this summer, and Edward J. Hill, veteran Detroit balloon racer, who is her instructor.

Nine hours and 15 minutes later, the first of Mrs. Piccard's five flights in training for her balloonist's license came to an end at Thamesville, Ontario, 58 miles by air-line from Detroit. The craft was forced down by high winds and the amateur pilot got her bruised arm in the landing.

Mrs. Piccard wasn't as nervous about the trip aloft as she was concerned to see that her husband enjoyed the trip. To that end she found space in the larder for an angel-food cake, explaining that "Jean loves angel cake." They also

Police Arrest 63 in 10th St. Gambling Raid

Resort Two Doors From Where Lincoln Died Is Entered.

Within two doors of the house where America's Civil War President died, police yesterday, led by Sergt. George Deyoe, of the secret vice squad, battled their way into 514 Tenth street northwest and arrested 63 men in an alleged gambling hall.

Sixty of the men were arrested as witnesses and released on $100 bond each.

The other three: George Stephens, 37, of the 700 block of Fifth street northwest; Frank Claiborne, 37, of the 100 block of T street northwest, and David Rones, 44, of the 2700 block of Devonshire place northwest, were charged with setting up gaming tables. All were held on a $2,000 bond each.

Pilot's Blow Halts Love Sick Youth's Leap From Plane

Muncie, Ind., May 16 (U.P.).—Love burned so fiercely in the heart of 19-year-old Regis Schwer that he determined to leap 2,000 feet from an airplane to the back yard of a girl with whom he had quarreled.

Pilot Raymond Williams quelled the blaze with a fire extinguisher.

Regis hurried from high school, hired Williams' plane and directed the pilot where to fly. When over the spot, Williams saw Regis climbing out of the cockpit. Williams let go of the controls. He seized Regis by the coat collar. The boy struggled. The plane plunged down to 500 feet.

Williams reached for the fire extinguisher; hit Regis on the head. Regis crumpled.

Williams pulled the plane from its dive and landed.

Regis later admitted he had planned to jump into his sweetheart's backyard just to show her how badly he felt.

40 Bodies in Coal Mine Blast Found

Brussels, May 16 (AP).—Forty bodies had been recovered tonight from the coal mine at Paturages au Fief, which was wrecked by a fire damp explosion 24 hours before.

Only five of the 48 miners known to have been trapped by the explosion had been found alive. They were in a nearby hospital tonight, where King Leopold visited them, offering words of cheer.

The youthful monarch spent a great part of the day inspecting the rescue operations and consoling the bereaved. Three men are still unaccounted for, but little hope is held that they may be among the survivors. Only 12 bodies have been identified. The rest were burned beyond recognition.

Sale of Nitrate Machinery To Japanese Firm Stirs U. S.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Tokyo, May 16 (U.P.).—Agents of the United States Government some months ago made informal representations to E. I. duPont De Nemours & Co. in connection with the company's sale of improved ammonium nitrate machinery to the Japanese Mitsui interests, it was learned today. Ammonium nitrate is used in munitions.

Representations were made in belief certain American patents supplied the Japanese should not be allowed to go outside the United States. They were withdrawn when the DuPont interests pointed out that if they refused a sale the Japanese could get similar machinery from Germany.

It was understood the United States' inquiries were based not on any fear of war between Japan and America, but merely as a matter of interest in foreign sale of American patents which might be used in National defense.

Washington, according to report, particularly was interested in the nitrate plant sale in that reports were current the Mitsui Mining Co.—the division of the Mitsui interests involved in the deal—was receiving a subsidy from the Tokyo war ministry. The DuPont interests were not informed of this subsidy. Their part in the transaction simply was to sell machinery, patents and engineering designs to the Mitsui concern.

It was understood the DuPont engineers questioned Mitsui on the reason why so large and expensive a plant was to be constructed. Some of the machinery was far more expensive than DuPont considered necessary for the manufacture of commercial nitrates, used extensively in Japan for fertilizer. Mitsui's reply to this was that they wanted the best that could be had regardless of cost.

It was understood the office of the military attache of the United States Embassy had reported on the work to the War Department.

Wire Firms Fight Over NRA Code

Western Union Attorney Hurls Threat of Court Action.

Postal Telegraph Charges Competition Is Using Unfair Practices.

Threats by Western Union to fight NRA in the courts should a code be imposed on the communications industry marked a trade agreement hearing yesterday.

At the same time outspoken officials of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. retaliated with charges that unfair trade practices by Western Union and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. were blocking prospects of recovery.

The warning of legal action in case the recovery administration moved to inflict a code without consent of those involved was given by Francis R. Stark, Western Union attorney.

"I do not believe," he said, "that there is any fear, should this proposed code or anything like it be imposed, that it would be enforced by any court.

Not Afraid of Legal Test.

"I have too much respect for the fellows of my craft to suppose for a moment that your own legal advisers will give you any encouragement to believe that it would be upheld in a legal test. It does not seem conceivable to me that you would even invoke the test."

Stark added if his company should be "ruined in the interest of another," the only alternative would be "to wage a legal contest along all fronts, necessarily challenging some of the fundamentals of the National Recovery Act."

Howard L. Kern, Postal vice president, contended unfair practices by Western Union and American Telephone & Telegraph prevented return of prosperity for the telegraph companies. He said the A. T. & T. teletype business was built up by sharp practices.

Wants Press Rates Upheld.

He insisted on a specific provision in the proposed code to prevent any change in existing press rates for telegrams. He was assured by L. H. Peebles, deputy administrator, that there was no desire by NRA to disturb present relations between the press and telegraph companies.

Kern argued unfair propaganda against the suggested code had been circulated by Western Union.

He declared the people of the country "are vitally interested in whether the greatest corporation in the world and the largest telegraph company in the United States will be able to defeat the purposes of

Fascists Seize Latvian Reins

Bloodless Coup Staged by President and Army Is Successful.

Riga, Latvia, May 16 (U.P.).—A swift coup placed this little republic bordering Soviet Russia in the hands of the Latvian Fascists today.

The garrison at Riga, on the Baltic, was mobilized in the maneuver which added the nation to the growing list of Fascist-controlled states in Europe.

Public buildings, including parliament, were occupied by troops. Police, reinforced by tank units, patrolled the streets. Martial law was proclaimed "to forestall unrest."

Troops armed with machine guns surrounded headquarters of the Socialist party, removed the red flag and hoisted the Latvian state flag. Several Socialist leaders were arrested, including Speaker of Parliament Kalnin. Weapons were alleged to have been found in Kalnin's villa.

Fascist leaders said political parties and parliament would be suspended pending enforcement of constitutional reforms. Newspapers were censored.

President Alberts Kviesis, a member of the Farmers' Union, and his cabinet ally, Col. Jacobson, former military attache at Warsaw, were believed to have engineered the putsch.

Minneapolis Strike Halts All Trucking

Filling Station Men Are Urged to Join Walkout.

Minneapolis, May 16 (AP).—Successful in virtually halting truck transportation in and through the city, striking drivers today began a campaign to stop all vehicular traffic by cutting off the city's gasoline supply.

Union officials said 5,000 men were participating in the strike, but truck owners said this figure was too large.

Some of the strikers, who are demanding union recognition and a closed-shop union agreement, guarded highways entering the city and cruised about stopping trucks and others visited filling stations in efforts to persuade attendants to cease operations.

President, Senate Bloc Agree on Silver Bill; 75-25 Ratio Accepted

Roosevelt Hits Glass Exchange Bill Section

Barkley, Angry, Wants to Resign; Conferees From Upper House Agree They Will Not Surrender, Unless Ordered by Senate.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

In an effort to relieve the tense situation which has developed over the stock market control bill, the Senate conferees on that measure yesterday agreed not to surrender the Glass amendment providing for a Federal Securities Exchange Commission until obtaining contrary instructions from the Senate.

This action was taken several hours after President Roosevelt in a press conference said he preferred the Federal Trade Commission to administer the stock market measure, rather than the Glass-sponsored new agency. He also stated a preference for a fixed marginal requirement provision instead of the Glass amendment, leaving discretion to the proposed commission to prescribe marginal requirements.

Mr. Roosevelt's unusual statement, made three hours before the House and Senate conferees were scheduled to hold their first meeting, so intensified the situation over the stock bill that the gathering was postponed until 2 p. m. today, after Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, attempted to resign as a Senate conferee.

Barkley, who fought for the Glass amendments in committee, became so angry when he heard of the President's statement that he hastened to Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher of the Senate conferees and asked to be relieved of further duty on the conference committee.

Fletcher and Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson decided to postpone the meeting of House and Senate conferees and went to work to pacify Barkley. The latter agreed to remain a conferee, provided he were given freedom of

Arms Parley Acts to Force French Hand

Guarantees Question Up as Geneva Conference Nears Failure.

Geneva, May 16 (AP).—A proposal to abandon the disarmament conference and report its failure to the League of Nations Council was tentatively launched tonight by conference leaders.

Although the idea has not been formally presented, it is known to be under consideration by statesmen seeking to inject new life into a desperately ill patient.

Encouragement for friends of disarmament came at the same time in a statement of France's foreign minister, Louis Barthou, that he had not given up hope of an agreement, and in reports that Germany is considering returning to the conference.

The entire disarmament situation is becoming a swift game of poker.

Indications are that the powers are trying to force France to show her hand on the question of guarantees, and that France is trying to push England into a pact for mutual military aid in the event either France or England is attacked.

France seems especially outspoken on England's vulnerability to attack from the air.

Foreign Minister Barthou's proclamation tended to counter the move for eventual conference adjournment. He maintained that France is keeping open the door to a disarmament agreement, and insisted he was convinced an agreement was possible.

The impression prevails here that disarmament will continue in a deadlock until the 1935 Saar plebiscite decides whether that area will be returned to Germany, and until Germany herself returns to the conference.

That affairs have reached a crisis is shown by the fact that in convoking tonight the disarmament conference for May 29, President Arthur Henderson fixed upon one subject for discussion: "The future course of the conferences."

G. O. P. Chiefs Hail Victory Of Sen. Reed

Renomination Is Seen as Indicating Trend From New Deal.

By Raymond Clapper.

Republican leaders brightened up yesterday when they heard from Pennsylvania that one of the most outspoken critics of the Roosevelt Administration had been victorious at the polls.

The renomination of Senator David A. Reed, conservative, anti-New Deal Republican, and the clear-cut beating he gave Gov. Gifford Pinchot, pro-Roosevelt candidate, for the Republican Senatorial nomination, was the most encouraging news that opponents of the present regime have heard in almost two years.

Associated Press dispatches from Pennsylvania reported that Reed had a lead of 118,027 on the basis of returns from 6,778 out of 7,936 precincts. Totals were: Reed, 545,672; Pinchot, 427,645.

Joe Guffey Has Lead.

In the Democratic Senatorial primary, Joseph F. Guffey had an overwhelming lead over his opponent, Roland S. Morris.

Senator Reed's majority was much larger than many had expected and made his victory stand out. It gained significance from the fact that it is the first decisive balloting since 1932, which showed unexpected strength for an opponent of the Roosevelt policies.

Reed is to be the chief spokesman of the opposition to the Administration reciprocal tariff bill which comes up in the Senate today. His victory is expected to make him one of the most powerful individuals on the Republican side for the remainder of the session.

The elderly lady, who referred to her most famous pupil, as "a nice boy and a good student," had been unconscious since a paralytic stroke several days ago.

Sly Morpheus Blocks Senate Speech as Montanan Dreams

Morpheus—favorite son of the kingdom of sleep—ruled over the Senate yesterday.

Parliamentary procedure was not in his line and he was unmindful of requests for recognition from the floor.

He ruled in his dreams as he lolled comfortably in the Vice President's chair, while Senator George W. Norris (Republican), Nebraska, was concluding a speech advocating abolition of the Electoral College.

Pointing his finger at the presiding officer, the Nebraskan denied charges that the new system of choosing the Chief Executive of the United States favors "a certain" political party.

Morpheus paid no heed.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg (Republican), Michigan, arose as the Nebraskan, mopping his brow, took his seat. Vandenburg addressed the chair:

"Mr. President," Vandenburg said calmly, seeking recognition to make a speech.

There was no response.

"Mr. President," the Michigan Senator shouted more insistently.

Still no reply.

Senators began to chuckle.

"Mr. President," Vandenburg repeated. He looked at the rostrum, then smiled broadly.

Senator John E. Erickson (Democrat), Montana, temporarily presiding, appeared to be sleeping soundly, elbow leaning on Vice President Garner's desk and his white-haired head resting comfortably in his cupped hands.

The Senate clerk, John Crockett, nudged the sleeping Montanan, and told him Senator Vandenburg desired to be recognized.

Senator Erickson wakened with a start and permitted the Michigan Senator to take the floor, while his colleagues howled.

Fight With Borah, Thomas Averted

Limited "Currency Inflation" Provided, Says Pittman.

By Elliott Thurston.

After a fortnight of backing and filling, President Roosevelt and the Senate silver bloc apparently reached unanimous agreement yesterday on what is to be an Administration bill providing:

1. A declaration by Congress that it is the policy of the United States to establish, independent of other nations, a metallic monetary reserve consisting of 75 per cent gold and 25 per cent silver.

2. Discretionary authority for the President to buy in world markets at world prices an estimated total of 1,800,000,000 ounces of silver against which silver certificates aggregating about $2,300,000,000 would be issued.

3. Discretionary authority for the President to nationalize all domestic free stocks of silver, to be taken over at 50 cents an ounce.

Subject to final approval of the language now being drafted by Treasury authorities, the agreement appears to be complete, and the bill will be put through Congress at once.

Borah, Others Satisfied.

Senators Borah, Wheeler and Elmer Thomas, who had exhibited varying degrees of disgruntlement at past conferences, expressed themselves as satisfied for the present, anyway, with the proposed legislation. Senator Pittman, author of the silver agreement at the London conference, was chiefly responsible for reconciling all factors.

He regards the projected measure as moderate, as providing a definitely limited amount of "currency inflation," and sees no reason why it should complicate currency stabilization or ultimate return to an international monetary standard.

From a political standpoint, the agreement avoids a battle with the silverites at this time and keeps Borah and others who have threatened to "go to the country" on the silver issue placated for the present.

Besides those named, present at the conference with Mr. Roosevelt yesterday were Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Herman Oliphant, Treasury counsel, and Sen-

Hospital Dash Made by Plane

Youth Sped to Baltimore From Roanoke for Brain Operation.

Baltimore, May 16 (AP).—In a spectacular dash from Roanoke, Va., a college student was brought to Baltimore in an Army transport plane today for an emergency brain operation.

The student, James Monroe Troutt 3d, son of an Army medical officer, was rushed to the Johns Hopkins Hospital and placed under the care of Dr. Walter E. Dandy, noted brain specialist.

He was suffering from concussion of the brain, received May 6 in an automobile accident. Physicians at Lexington, Va., where the youth is a student at Virginia Military Institute, decided today that an operation at the Hopkins might save his life and the emergency request for an Army plane followed.

Parole Official Debates Freedom for Lea, Jr.

Raleigh, N. C., May 16 (AP).—A formal petition for either a pardon or parole for Luke Lea, jr., was under consideration tonight by Parole Commissioner Edwin M. Gill.

The petition was filed today by Mrs. Luke Lea, sr., stepmother of the 26-year-old Tennessean who entered the North Carolina prison last week to serve two to six years for bank law violations. Clemency was asked on the grounds that young Luke is in poor physical condition and that he was merely following his father in transactions which led to their convictions.

Chamberlain Injured When Cab Turns Over

London, May 16 (AP).—Sir Austen Chamberlain, former foreign secretary, was bruised and shaken up tonight as a taxicab in which he was riding collided with another cab and turned over. Examination showed no bones were broken.

Lord Dawson Penn, King George's physician, was passing and stopped to give aid. He took Sir Austen to his home.

House Spurred Into Activity By Roosevelt

Banking Committee Jam Broken as President Outlines Wishes.

By Robert C. Albright.

The House legislative log jam, piled high in the slow-moving Banking Committee behind the $440,000,000 industrial loans bill, broke with a rush yesterday, as the White House once more took a hand in the drive for adjournment.

A report on the loans to industries bill, $90,000,000 shy of the relief authorized by the Senate, was ordered by the Banking Committee, while Democratic leaders in conference with the President slated this first on a list of six measures that "must" pass this session.

At the same time, a message was expected from the President on pending social legislation—a mollifying gesture toward a discontented House labor bloc, now waging an apparently vain fight to put over 30-hour week, labor board, unemployment insurance and old-age pension bills.

To Steer Off Measures.

Under the plan now discussed, the White House will take a sympathetic attitude toward these measures, but action will be passed over this session, pending a study by a Congressional committee, authorized by a joint resolution.

The revised "must" list of Administration bills, framed at yesterday's White House conference, follows:

Authorization for the Federal Reserve Board and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to small industries. (Already passed by the Senate.)

Extension of the temporary $2,500 bank deposit guarantee for another year. (Already passed by the Senate.)

Regulation of communications, including telephone, telegraph and radio, by a single Governmental agency. (Already passed by the Senate.)

Appropriation of $1,322,000,000 more for public works and relief. (Estimates now before House Appropriations Committee.)

Reciprocal bargaining authority for the President. (Passed by the House and slated to come up in the Senate today.)

The Fletcher-Rayburn stock market control bill. (Passed by both houses and now in conference.)

Bills Not So Urgent.

Commodity exchange regulation, housing relief and the Admniistration's oil-control bill were not on the favored list, although the President would like to see all three passed if they do not impede adjournment.

Measures passed over included 30-hour-week unemployment relief, old-age pension and Wagner labor board bills.

House leaders called to the White House were Speaker Rainey, Democratic Leader Byrns and Chairman William Bankhead of the important House Rules Committee.

Twenty-four hours earlier the President conferred with Chairman Henry Steagall and Democratic members of his House Banking Committee, where three important Administration measures have been languishing.

The conference produced immediate results. After weeks of delay, the loans-to-industries bill, broadly revised, was ordered reported by the committee. Today the committee will call up for action the proposed extension of the temporary deposit guarantee another year. On this the President is insistent.

The loans to industries bill, reported yesterday, authorizes total advances of only $440,000,000, as against $530,000,000 provided by the Senate.

Maximum Is Reduced.

Of this, $300,000,000 would be available in RFC loans, and $140,000,000 from Federal Reserve surplus loans to individual industries would be cut down to a $100,000 maximum, against $1,000,000 provided by the Senate. No firms incorporated after January 1 last would be eligible, and all advances must be applied for and approved before next January 1. Specification that advances be made only "in exceptional circumstances" and on "working" capital, were removed.

The committee increased from $50,000,000 to $125,000,000 the authorization for RFC relief loans in needy drainage districts.

Industries in distress must first apply to the Federal Reserve; and if their requests are turned down, they may then turn to the RFC. Some members of the committee believe the Federal Reserve will make no loans under the authorization, and this feeling was instrumental in the committee eliminating $140,000,000 additional authorized in the Senate bill.

The President's proposed extension of the temporary deposit guarantee is now bound up in a bill introduced by Chairman Steagall, providing also an authorization for closed bank "pay-offs" through Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation advances. The President wants the two separated.

An effort is being made to get White House approval of an amendment, extending the temporary guarantee to $5,000 deposits on January 1. It is understood the President has assured members there will be no further extensions asked, so the permanent provisions of the deposit guarantee law would go into effect July 1, 1935.

Failure of the President and Democratic leaders to include social legislation in their "must" list, drew an immediate retort from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Green Sees Deliberate Block.

"Apparently those who are in charge of the legislative program in Congress have determined that the measures sponsored by labor and in which labor is deeply interested shall not pass," said Green.

Not only the 30-hour week, unemployment relief and the Wagner disputes measures, but the La Follette bill to appropriate $10,000,000,000 for public works, would pass, he said, if members were given an opportunity to vote.

"Labor will study the record made and will interpret the failure of Congress to pass the Wagner disputes act and the other measures sponsored by labor as a surrender on the part of Congress to the enemies of labor and to the representatives of big business and vested interests," he said.

action. It is understood he intends to fight for the Glass amendments to the last ditch.

Although it is believed on Capitol Hill that eventually—perhaps not for two or three weeks, in order to let tempers cool—Congress will accede to the President's wishes, the opinion was widespread yesterday that he had made more difficult the task of his leaders and had improved the position of the Glass amendments, which he seems to oppose.

Gave "Personal Views."

The White House late in the day took cognizance of the damage it had done by emphasizing that when the President spoke in the morning he was giving his personal views and had not intended to preclude a genuine conference between the Senate and House on the bill.

It was added that Mr. Roosevelt did not regard as of paramount importance the question of what agency should have jurisdiction over the security exchanges, although earlier he had cited reasons why he thought the Federal Trade Commsision should be the agency.

Meanwhile Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, who on Tuesday attempted to resign from the Banking and Currency Committee because, despite his seniority, he was passed over as a conferee on the bill in favor of junior Democrats, reentered the fray. He indicated that Mr. Roosevelt some days ago had favored the Glass proposals, now in controversy.

"I concede to the President and every man the right to change his mind," Glass said when informed of the morning Roosevelt statement.

Not Chasing Phantoms.

Asked if this meant that the President had told him that he favored the creation of a new agency to regulate the stock markets and discceionary marginal requirement provision, Glass replied:

"Do you think I have been chasing phantoms for the last five weeks?"

At the White House it was said that the President throughout consideration of the bill by House and Senate, had kept an open mind on the features of the bill and had told both Representative Rayburn (Democrat), of Texas, in charge of the House bill, and Glass to go ahead and do what each thought best. But, the President reserved the right to make a choice if House and Senate differed, it was pointed out.

The President in his press conference said he was prepared to state his preferences now only because the bill was out of the House and Senate chambers and in conference. He sa idhe favored the trade commission as the regulatory agency because it already had machinery set-up to handle the task imposed by the bill; creation of a new commission wil lbe increased by two members it would be able to carry out the legislation with less expense than a new commission.

Favors Concentration.

He explained that he favored the fixing of a definite marginal requirement as provided in the House bill and thought the concentration of control over brokers' loans and that form of credit under the Federal Reserve Board, as provided by the House measure, preferable to the division between a new agency and the Reserve Board, as proposed in the Senate bill.

Mr. Roosevelt said he had given his views to the House conferees on Tuesday and subsequent to the conference at which he was talking intended to communicate them to the Senate conferees through Fletcher. This he did by telephone. The fact that the President first told the public what he thought and then the Senate group irked some members of that body.

When the Senate conferees met to decide their course it was generally agreed that in the face of what amounted to public dictation from the White House and also in the face of the fact that the Senate last week had rejected the Federal Trade Commission agency provision by the overwhelming vote of 29 to 51, there was nothing for them to do but insist on the creation of a new agency until otherwise directed by the Senate.

Thus the conference, when it is held, is doomed to end in disagreement, which will require the Senate conferees to ask for new instructions. This means that the Senate must again vote on the question of whether it wants a new agency or the Trade Commission to regulate the stock markets. It is believed that in view of the President's wishes, the latter proposal will prevail. But it will require a number of Senators to do a somersault over their vote last week.

Public to Get Darrow Report

President First to Study Reply of Johnson to NRA Criticism.

The highly controversial Darrow report on the NRA, with an equally emphatic reply by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and his chief lieutenants, is back on President Roosevelt's desk.

The President said the whole mass of documents might be released for publication today. But later it was indicated they will be held up a few more days.

The President desires to go over the Johnson reply, which is expected to prove as violent in its exception to the Darrow report as the latter castigates the NRA.

Because so much has been said concerning the report, with earlier suggestions it might be suppressed, it was apparent that the White House will make the entire collection of statements public. The Darrow report originally was held up at the request of Gen. Johnson, who wanted to make simultaneous answer.

The National Recovery Review Board, headed by Clarence Darrow, is understood to have made sweeping charges against the NRA on the ground it was oppressing small business. In addition, it is said to demand removal of Sol Rosenblatt, divisional administrator in charge of amusement and transportation codes.

Incensed over the tone of the report, administrators of the eight codes reviewed by the Darrow board made written reports to Gen. Johnson and these he is said to have embodied in his general reply.

States Urg[illegible] To Aid Rural Relief Work

Use of County and Home Agents Proposed by Farm Bureau.

Sending the Federal Government's rural relief-rehabilitation program another step along the way, State relief administrations are being urged to utilize the far-flung extension service of the Department of Agriculture to instruct farm families in rehabilitation work, it was learned yesterday.

Following recommendations of H. W. Gilbertson, senior extension agriculturist of the Department of Agriculture, that county agents in 2,700 counties and home demonstration agents in 1,200 counties be utilized, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration is urging State administrations to take up the matter. In counties where the number of rural relief cases justifies it, the States are being urged to employ assistants to the extension agents on FERA funds.

These assistants, under supervision of technically trained agents, would arrange demonstration meetings and short courses to train rural men and women to supplement their farm incomes. It is proposed they teach rural families carpentry, painting, plastering and similar trades; show how to lay out drainage and plumbing systems; demonstrate sewing and clothes making and similar arts.

Although county agents now are doing this type of work, the rural relief division of FERA feels its rehabilitation program can be speeded and extended if the county agent activities are expanded under its sponsorship. Letters urging States to take up this system with their relief funds have gone out.

The plan would fit in well with work relief programs, as rural families would be trained in developing roads, constructing markets, developing parks and playgrounds and planning fullest utilization of food crops raised on their farms.

Use of the county and demonstration agents is entirely a State matter, officials of the FERA emphasized. The Federal Government will have only an indirect share in the plan in furnishing States with relief funds devoted to this purpose.

The rural rehabilitation program, based on making farm families more self-sufficient through work programs giving a supplemental cash income and the fullest use of the opportunity to raise all food necessary, is gaining headway, the FERA reported yesterday. Rural plans have been worked out in 18 States to date and submitted to Federal headquarters for approval.

the recovery act as applied to them."

R. B. White, president of Western Union, accused Postal officials of agitating a communications code to force either merger of the telegraph companies or Government operation.

"We most strenuously object," he said, "to injecting in the long-established rate arrangements of this country provisions which we know will add unnecessary and increased burdens to telegraph users; will bring no increase in revenue, and seriously injure the telegraph system by driving a large number of users from it entirely."

Urges Newspaper Clause.

W. J. McCambridge, Associated Press traffic executive, insisted on insertion of a provision in the proposed code which would protect newspapers from rate increases. He suggested a clause reading:

"This section shall not apply to interchange of wire facilities between members of the industry, or to wires, circuits or services furnished to the United States, or to any of its agencies, or to the press."

J. C. Willever, a Western Union vice president, protested revision upward of telegraph rates would reduce the income of the companies by decreasing the volume of business.

"The principle of developing new traffic of a nonessential character through the attraction of special rates," he explained, "is a well recognized and established practice in many lines of business.

"Power and light companies, gas companies and water companies all reduce rates as volume increases. The principle is well illustrated in the telegraph industry by the familiar night letters, which give 50 words for the price ordinarily charged for ten."

Under question, Willever conceded his company had distributed circulars among its patrons urging them to fight the code. He termed as "gross exaggerations" reports that 10,000 were sent out in Washington alone.

Favors Centralization.

Meanwhile, David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, told the House Commerce Committee he favored centralized communcations control.

"Foreign nations," he said, "give much thought to the control and effective planning of their international communication services. The creation of a single Federal regulatory body in this country will mark a most constructive step in the communications history of the United States."

Sarnoff suggested several changes in the Dill-Rayburn bill. His principal complaint was against a provision to require public hearings and newspaper announcement of plans for establishment of new circuits.

"The language," he said, "is obviously taken from the Interstate Commerce Commission act, where it applies to new railroad construction.

"The construction of a new railroad, or its extension, is a major enterprise—involving vast quantities of capital, labor, material and rights of way. The creation of a new communcations circuit is now a simple matter. The rules governing new railroad construction obviously do not fit communications."

After Sarnoff finished the committee concluded hearings on the measure to provide regulation of communications systems by a special agency. Senate amendments will be considered today.

U. S. Job Plot Laid to G. O .P. By Dalrymple

Hurley Denies Conspiracy 'Hatched' at His Home as Witness Claims.

Another "plot," alleged to have been hatched in a Virginia home, was described to a Senate committee yesterday.

The "plot" was revealed by Maj. A. V. Dalrymple, former prohibition director and now a special assistant to the Attorney General. He said the plotting was done at Leesburg, Va., home of Patrick J. Hurley, former Secretary of War. The general idea of the "plot," he said, was to keep Republicans in Government jobs and to get rid of Democrats.

Maj. Dalrymple was testifying at the McKellar civil service hearing on a resolution providing that reinstated prohibition employes must stand merit tests.

Six "conspirators" were present at the meeting, Maj. Dalrymple told the committee. He said they were Hurley, former Senator Watson, of Indiana; former Senator Moses, of New Hampshire; John S. Hurley, former director of the Justice Department dry unit; Edward E. Birney, former personnel officer of that unit, and D. H. Reichgur, Burney's assistant.

False, Says Hurley.

"Maj. Dalrymple's statement is wholly and maliciously false," Patrick J. Hurley declared in a letter addressed to Senator McKellar immediately after the hearing.

"Not one of the persons named has ever at any time visited my home in Virginia. I am well acquainted with former Senators Watson and Moses. I have never had the pleasure of meeting any of the other persons named. No such meeting as described by Dalrymple was ever held in my home. I was never present at any such meeting at any place."

At the meeting, which Dalrymple said was held recently, there was proposed a scheme to "get rid of 24 more Democrats," the witness told the committee. He described the scheme as including an "irregular transfer" of certain alcohol tax employes to the Treasury. Dalrymple said similar plots were under way last summer after he took over the prohibition directorship.

Former Senator Moses' secretary pointed out, following the meeting, that Moses was in Europe from last May until last November, during and following the London conference to which he was a delegate.

"Plot" Described.

The six "conspirators," Dalrymple told the committee, "knew the Presidential order for the transfer of the dry unit from the Justice Department to the Treasury Department provided for retention of the tax work in the Justice Department. A scheme was hatched to transfer such of these employes as they wished to the Treasury—a direct violation of the President's order—and then they knew the Treasury could not take them and that 24 more Democrats would be out of jobs. That's just what was done and what happened."

The hearing followed a conference with Secretary Morgenthau attended by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the majority floor leader; Speaker Rainey and Representative Byrnes, of Tennessee. Byrnes said he had been informed that 90 per cent of the persons reinstated were Republicans.

Secretary Morgenthau said the Alcohol Control Administration was in need of trained men. He said they must be taken from certified civil service lists and that he understood the selections made resulted from this necessity.

Survivors Hoisted Aboard the Olympic

Lifeboat from the Nantucket lightship shown being hauled aboard the liner Olympic off the fog-darkened New England coast Tuesday. A few minutes before, the inbound liner plowed into the lightship, sinking her and killing four members of the crew. Three among the seven rescued died aboard the Olympic en route to New York.

Radio Beam Focal Point In Ship Probe

Investigation Is Ordered Into Ramming of The Nantucket.

New York, May 16 (AP).—With the radio direction beam as its probable focal point, an investigation into the Nantucket tragedy was ordered today by the Department of Commerce after the S. S. Olympic, its flags at half-mast, brought to port the four survivors of the famous lightship it rammed and sank in the thick fog shrouding dangerous Nantucket shoals.

On orders of Secretary Roper of the Commerce Department, the United States Steamboat Inspection Service will hold an inquiry tomorrow.

Capt. John W. Binks, his 35 years of unblemished service with the White Star Line marred just before he was to retire, and other officers and members of the crew of the Olympic will testify.

Beams Figure In Disaster.

From Capt. Binks' version of the tragedy—the tale of disaster as it unfolded in the control room of the sister ship of the Titanic—it was strongly indicated that the direction beams sent from the radio of the Nantucket lightship will figure most prominently in the hearing.

These beams, Capt. Binks related, were used to chart a course intended to keep the lightship on the Olympic's starboard intead of dead ahead.

The Olympic was proceeding at reduced speed through the fog when the siren of the lightship was heard. Besides the master, there were four other officers on the bridge.

Had to Haul Away.

The radio beams, Capt. Binks said, "only give us an approximate bearing. We thought the light vessel was 3 degrees off the starboard bow when I hauled away. If I had not hauled away we might have missed her, maybe by a ship's length, but I couldn't do that. I had to haul away from the danger of the shoals."

The only damage to the Olympic of steel that sent seven men to —the only testimony of a trim hull their deaths—was a slight dent, and a few scratches on the bow.

The ship brought to port three bodies picked up in the water by lifeboats dropped from the Olympic immediately after the crash.

Federal Trade Body Planning Air Clean-up

Radio Advertising Will Be Restricted After July 1.

The Federal Trade Commission announced yesterday that it plans to "clean up" radio advertising, effective July 1.

The commission said it would "scrutinize all commercial continuities, extending the same principles that for many years has been applied to newspaper, periodical and other forms of advertising."

The announcement said the action was based on the act giving the commission jurisdiction over false and misleading advertisements in interstate commerce. At the same time the Federal Radio Commission said it had received numerous complaints from radio listeners, which had been turned over to the trade commission and the Department of Justice.

"Anticipating a fine spirit of cooperation from the radio industry, as already manifested by some of the leading executives," the trade body's statement said, "the commission is approaching the radio field in a spirit of friendly cooperation."

The commission explained advertisers agree by stipulation to cease when cited by the commission, although in some instances hearings are held to determine whether the commission's claim is valid. If the advertiser is found guilty, the commission issues a "cease and desist" order, enforceable by the circuit court of appeals, to compel the advertiser to refrain from the objectionable action.

6,000 Seamen Walk Out in Sympathy With Longshoremen.

San Francisco, May 16 (AP).—An appeal for Federal troops to guard the water front so nonunion workers could load and unload 37 ships tied up in Elliott Bay was made today, as the ranks of striking longshoremen on the Pacific Coast were swelled by several thousand seamen who walked out in sympathy with the strikers.

Mayor John F. Dore, of Seattle, sought the troops in an appeal to Secretary of Interior Ickes.

The Government meanwhile took steps to settle the dispute that has tied up scores of ships. Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor and aid to NRA Administrator Hugh Johnson, left Washington by airplane for San Francisco.

Two other organizations today joined the striking longshoremen and San Francisco Bay ferryboats may soon be tied up.

The Sailors Union, with an estimated membership of between 6,000 and 7,000 men, and the Masters, Mates and Pilots Union of North America, Local 90, also walked out.

Crews of six offshore and coast... steamships walked off the ... today at San Pedro and ... Bosen harbors in sympathy ... the longshoremen's demand ... shorter hours and higher wages. ... B. Thomas G. Plant, employers' spokesman, said the shippers were continuing to recruit men here and that about 1,000 were at work on the cargoes and a citizens' committee was organized to cope with the situation. In other coast ports, lumber mills were closed, grain movements virtually at a standstill and perishable goods piling up on the docks.

Black to Quit Soon, Admits Roosevelt

Federal Reserve Head Wants to Go Home.

Constant intimations that Eugene Black was going to resign as governor of the Federal Reserve Board, current ever since last fall, are easily understood, according to President Roosevelt.

Mr. Black, pleading to go back to his Atlanta home, has been kept in Washington only by repeated insistence of the President. But this time he really is to go, despite the President's expressed wish to keep him as long as possible.

No, he has no successor in mind, the President said. Mr. Black intends to submit his resignation, finally, after Congress adjourns.

Carman Freed In Compromise

Horse Trainer Leaves Jail After Paying Alimony to First Wife.

A compromise settlement between Richard F. Carman, widely known race horse trainer, and his first wife, Mrs. Angela Roach Carman, yesterday brought freedom to Carman, who has been in the District Jail since April 10.

Carman was sent to jail when he ignored a decree of the District Supreme Court which ordered him to pay his wife $100 a month. Justice Jennings Bailey ordered him jailed for contempt.

While he was serving his time, Carman was restrained from leaving the District until he posted an $1,800 "neat exeat" bond. Unable to raise this bond, he was kept in jail until yesterday.

Mrs. Carman and her husband reached an agreement and the writ was quashed. The first Mrs. Carman also agreed to drop a $100,000 alienation of affections suit she had begun against the second Mrs. Carman in Baltimore.

Reed's Victory Over Pinchot HeartensG.O.P.

Leaders See Trend From New Deal by Vote in Pennsylvania.

sult, Senator Reed was quoted by the Associated Press at Pittsburgh as saying: "I interpret the result to mean that in Pennsylvania we want neither the old deal, nor the new deal, but the square deal."

Republican leaders issued a sheaf of statements hailing the result as marking the turn of the tide. One said that Senator Reed's victory put him in line for recognition in the 1936 Presidential race.

Facing the problem of reorganizing the Republican National Committee when it meets June 5 to accept the resignation of Chairman Everett Sanders, Republican spokesmen said the nomination of Senator Reed would greatly encourage the Republican Party.

Democrats Are Confident.

Democratic spokesmen said Republican interpretations were absurd and that while the Administration welcomed support from those earlier aligned with the opposition, it was not dependent for success upon the outcome of fights within the Republican party. They denied the fate of Pinchot was a test of the New Deal.

These comments were what might have been expected. Many factors entered into the situation. Gov. Pinchot atributed his own defeat to the fact that his health prevented him from making his usual barnstorming campaign of the State.

Yet Pinchot and has associates laid such stress upon their pro-Roosevelt leanings, and Reed was so vigorous in his assaults on the Administration, and each of the candidates by temperament and past performance so thoroughly symbolized the opposing viewpoints, that the result seems certain to be viewed by a great many as a test on the Republican side.

It is likely to strengthen the hand of those Republicans who prefer to go their own way as a party without attempting to take on the protective coloring of New Deal principles. This event occurs at an important moment in the Republican party's life. It comes in the midst of considering difference within the party as to whether in its impending reorganization it should move toward the left.

Pinchot May Enter Race.

The possibility that Pinchot might now become an independent candidate for the Senate was widely discussed, with much dispute as to what the effect of such a move would be. Some believed that as an independent Pinchot could take enough votes away from Reid to enable Guffy to win in November. Others insisted with equal confidence that Pinchot as an independent would split the New Deal vote between himself and Guffey and make Reed's election more likely.

The great excess of Republican registrations in the State would seem to indicate that Guffey could be elected only with the aid of a large slice of Republican votes. He would naturally expect to obtain such votes from among Pinchot followers.

Gov. Pinchot has given no hint of his plans except to say he intended to continue to fight "for the interests of the people against concentrated wealth." He refused recently to pledge himself to abide by the result of the primary.

Republican comment included the following:

Senator Daniel O. Hastings, co-chairman of the Republican Senatorial Congressional Committee:

"The renomination of Senator Reed in Pennsylvania by what appears to be upward of a hundred thousand majority is a great victory for the American citizen who wants a square deal and not a New Deal. It means at least that the influence of the Roosevelt Administration and its policies can not prevail in Pennsylvania. It definitely shows that the people in this country are opposed to having their everyday life and business governmentally regulated.

Encouraging to G. O. P.

"The triumph of Senator Reed will greatly encourage the Republican party. It means that the citizen still wants safe and sane government, along principles which built up this Nation. The foibles of theorists no longer appeal."

Representative Bertrand H. Snell, House minority leader:

"The result in the Pinchot-Reed contest shows that the American people are not at all crazy and not all influenced by free jobs. There is no question but that it was a clear-cut contest between advocates of the New Deal and adherents of the original American principles. The Reed renomination will encourage the party organization all along the line, putting a fighting spirit into it."

Representative Fred A. Britten (Republican), Illinois:

"To the Democratic Administration in Washington, it is a blast for more conservative action and it is unmistakable opposition to the preparation of legislation 'in the little red house in Georgetown' by a group of Prof. Felix Frankfurter's radicals. Senator Reed's majority may reasonably entitle him to recognition as the Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1936."

Senator Charles L. McNary, Senate minority leader:

"It is a great Republican victory. It proves there are many people who do not like the New Deal."

Democratic comment included:

Claims Absurd.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Senate majority leader:

"Every one knows that the Republican party has been strongly entrenched in Pennsylvania for a long period, and it seems absurd to me for Senator Hastings and his associates on the Republican Senatorial Committee to proclaim the triumph of Senator Reed in his party primary as a victory for the Republican party."

Representative Joseph W. Byrns, House majority leader:

"I don't see how the Republicans can get any satisfaction out of the Pinchot-Reed result. The large Republican vote cast for Gov. Pinchot is very encouraging, in my opinion, and shows that despite the rock-ribbed character of the Republican party in that State, a large segment is whole-heartedly behind the New Deal."

Senator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona:

"The Dutch have captured Holland."

He was presented with the girls' auxiliary medal by Miss Mae P. Bradshaw, assistant principal of the school. He was given another award by Allan Davis, principal of the school.

Senator Kean To Face Warm Fall Campaign

Incumbent Will Oppose Gov. Moore, Popular State Chief.

Newark, N. J., May 16 (AP).—Hamilton F. Kean, wealthy Wall street banker who was swept into a seat in the United States Senate, in the Hoover landslide in 1928, today faced the keenest opposition of his 30-year political career in his quest for reelection.

Nominated in yesterday's New Jersey primary which featured the four-cornered race for the Republican gobernatorial designation, Kean now must campaign against Gov. A. Harry Moore, considered the Democratic party's foremost vote getter in New Jersey.

Kean yesterday piled up a 3 to 1 margin of victory over former Assemblyman James G. Blauvelt, of Ridgewood, an exponent of State-owned utilities and a foe of Wall street, even though he disdained to enter the primary campaign in person.

Moore, twice elected the State's chief executive—in 1931 by the largest majority ever accorded a gubernatorial candidate in the State—was unopposed.

Political observers, pointing to Moore's vote in 1931, anticipated a vigorous campaign would be unfolded by Kean from now until November. National issues are certain to be the point of contention, inasmuch as Kean, a Republican of the old order, is an opponent of President Roosevelt, while Moore is an ardent supporter of the New Deal.

Observers expected, too, that Moore's popularity would be of advantage to William L. Dill, of Paterson, nominated yesterday by the Democrats in his struggle for Governor, with Harold G. Hoffman, young and dynamic State motor vehicle commissioner.

Dill had virtually no opposition from the insurgent, Theron McCampbell, Monmouth assemblyman, and won, 5 to 1. Hoffman emerged the victor in the Republican conflict by a margin far greater than even his own supporters had expected. He rolled up a total that surpassed that of his three foes combined. With but 50 scattered districts missing, the vote stood: For Hoffman, 245,655; for former Judge Robert Carey, of Jersey City, 96,035; for State Senator Joseph G. Wolber, of Essex, 74,984, and for State Senator Emerson Richards, 52,227.

Thirteen incumbent Congressmen—ten Republicans and three Democrats—also emerged victors yesterday, as did four tate senators and 31 of the 38 State Assemblymen who were seeking renomination.

Pinchot Hints Senator Race As Independent

Defeat by "Old Guard" Blamed by Governor on Bad Health.

Philadelphia, May 16 (AP).—Blaming his impaired health for his defeat, Gifford Pinchot, Pennsylvania's insurgent Republican Governor, today admitted with a wan smile that the "Old Guard" he has fought for years once more has barred his way to the United States Senate.

Barely recovered from a three-month illness, the graying Pinchot went into the campaign against Senator David A. Reed, seeking renomination, but he lost—lost by more than 118,000 on the face of trickling late returns.

Reed said his victory indicates Pennsylvania is more intereseld "in a square deal than in the New Deal."

In the Governor's terse after-the-battle statement—which he withheld until today—some of his friends saw a hint that Pinchot will run independently against Reed and the Democratic nominee, Joseph F. Guffey.

"I shall go right on fighting for the interests of the people against concentrated wealth, just as I have done all my life," the Governor said, conceding defeat, but, he added quickly to a question of whether he will run independently:

"This must not be taken to imply any decision as to my future political action."

In the wake of the primary, there was lively discussion both in Pennsylvania and in Washington as to whether Pinchot's defeat by Reed actually was a test of the New Deal, chief issue of the campaign.

Pinchot went into the campaign pledged to support the Democratic President; Reed as a critic of the Roosevelt program.

The entire organization State ticket was nominated with Reed.

Three Identify Dillinger Girl

Evelyn Frechette Lived in St. Paul Hide-Out of Gangster, Claim.

St. Paul, May 16 (AP).—Blazing machine guns, a red-headed woman and Evelyn Frechette, were sketched by witnesses today as the Federal Government penned into the records an identification of John Dillinger's sweetheart as a habitue of a St. Paul apartment last March.

Two women and a man testified that Miss Frechette was seen in a Lexington avenue apartment, where the Government charges she concealed Dillinger when he was scught by Department of Justice agents; the same apartment was rented by a red-headed woman March 19.

Reconstructing the story of how Dillinger and his mob hid in the apartment until flushed out by Federal agents, leading to the desperado's wounding and treatment by Dr. Clayton May and Mrs. Augusta Salt, a nurse, also charged with harboring Dillinger, the wife of the apartment house proprietor told of having seen Miss Frechette.

The dark-eyed brunette, Miss Frechette, was seen ironing one night in the apartment, Mrs. Daniel Coffey, wife of the building proprietor, testified.

Mrs. Coffey finished her story with a tale of hearing shots when Federal agents drove Dillinger out of the building.

took along a dozen bananas, nine oranges and some rolls.

Mrs. Piccard must make at least two more flights with Hill and two solo flights, one at night and one in the daytime to become eligible for the coveted license, but not even the prospect of that ascent alone into the darkened sky daunts her.

"I have a lot of books and I've been studying meteorology for several months," she explained with a smile that revealed no trace of fear.

Hill added the reassuring word that she gave indications of becoming a good pilot and that she already has "a good theoretical knowledge of ballooning."

The Senators were jubliant as they left the White House offices. Borah said he considered the outcome a victory for free coinage.

Roosevelt Yields.

Several emphasized that until yesterday the Administration had held out against mandatory issuance of silver certificates against the silver reserves. Mr. Roosevelt, it appeared, had now yielded on this point, and this was the main reason why the silverites were rejoicing.

One provision of the bill will call for a tax of 50 per cent on the profits on domestic free stocks of silver, if and when the President decides to nationalize them.

While, apparently, there is to be no time limit fixed by the bill, and the President may buy silver when and where he pleases, the silverites understand that he definitely means to go ahead with the purchases. The bill will stipulate that when and if the world price of silver reaches the American statutory price of $1.29 an ounce the buying will stop.

After the conference, the White House announced that within a day or two the President expects to send a special message to Congress submitting the silver bill. As the White House put it, the message will relate to the metallic base behind the currency of the United States, both gold and silver.

Also, it was said, the message will review the steps taken heretofore in regard to currency and metallic reserves and will make specific recommendations as to the next steps the Administration will propose for establishment of an improved monetary system.

"All Very Happy."

Senator Pittman remarked that "We are all very happy. There is no misunderstanding. A bill will be ready very soon. I think there certainly will be action at this session of Congress." He was ready, incidentally, to offer odds of 9 to 1 on that.

It is his estimate that 1,800,000,000 ounces will have to be bought to achieve a 25 per cent silver reserve, and that roundly $2,300,000,000 of new currency will be issued against it. Some of the Senators said the issue of this money would be "mandatory."

Pittman pointed out that by his previous amendment, silver is legal tender for payment of all debts, public and private.

"I think there will be something coming out very soon," said Borah. "We are coming along fine. We made greater progress today than in all the previous conferences."

"Along what lines?" he was asked.

"Along the lines of remonitizing silver," he replied. "I think there will be some mandatory features."

"There is going to be a bill," said Senator Adams, of Colorado. "There is no conflict now."

"We are coming to final agreement," Senator Wheeler, of Montana, remarked. "It is along the lines we have been talking about. It will be mandatory with respect to declaration of policy and permissive on Nationalization of domestic silver stocks."

Mrs. Roosevelt, it was remarked by some of the Senators, had cited favorably Walter Lippmann's article of last Tuesday wherein he argued that silver should be made "basic money," that it would help break the world gold corner and raise prices.

Assuming this correctly reflects the President's views, recent signs that he was turning away from monetary manipulation and something approximating the 1926 price level goal have been misleading. He now appears to be definitely on the same road as before.

Yesterday's conference began with Oliphant reading the draft of a bill, each section of which was discussed. According to United Press, when the section dealing with purchase of silver was reached, the President read the words "authorize and direct" and then paused.

"Authorize and direct, eh?" the United Press quoted him as remarking, "—and direct."

After glancing around at the faces of the silverites, Mr. Roosevelt, according to the United Press, added:

"Oh, well, I guess that's all right."

It was agreed, also, that the statutory price of $1.29 an ounce would govern in valuing the silver bought for reserves and in issuing new certificates.

As Senator Smith, of South Carolina, remarked of the agreement, as he strolled out of the President's office:

"It's a blamed sight more than I thought we'd get!"

With drought conditions growing more serious in most of the wheat belt States, relief administrators representing those States will meet today with Harry L. Hopkins, head of the Relief Administration, to map a program.

Meanwhile, extension directors of various States were in Washington to discuss the situation with Agriculture Department officials.

Secretary Wallace said yesterday that only in Kansas and eastern Wisconsin, where there have been heavy rains, have conditions improved.

House Committee Meets.

A committee of nine members of the House considered a drought relief program, including liberalization of wheat and corn-hog allotment contracts and a policy of water conservation. A sub-committee of three was appointed to work out a plan for relief cropping of lands withdrawn from cultivation under the crop reduction program. Members of the sub-committee are Representatives Gillette (Democrat), Iowa; Carpenter (Democrat), Nebraska, and Boileau (Republican), Wisconsin.

The committee adopted a resolution urging the Public Works Administration to take steps to bring about a systematic program designed to divert river water into reservoirs and lakes, where it could be impounded for use during drought periods.

Secretary Wallace said the department is considering building up farm reserves to be used in future drought periods and is working on plans for new water supplies, including deepening of wells and drilling new ones.

May Purchase Cattle.

The department also is contemplating purchase of cattle by the Surplus Relief Corporation and processing them for distribution to the needy. One of the most serious problems is that of feeding live stock.

Among those who had arrived last night to attend the relief conference with Hopkins were Gov. Tom Berry of South Dakota; T. J. Edmonds, regional field representative, and M. A. Kennedy, finance director of the Relief Administration in South Dakota; A. T. Forsburg, director of drought relief in Minnesota; Dean F. C. Coffey, relief administrator of Minnesota; James H. Dance, director of drought relief and rural rehabilitation in Wisconsin, and Will Metz, relief director of Wyoming.

Police Seek Fourth Gettle Kidnaper

women to trial on kidnaping charges.

Under California laws, a prisoner can not be paroled so long as there is another conviction against him. United States Attorney Pierson Hall predicted speedy trial and conviction of the men on the Federal charges.

The life sentences, imposed after a 14-minute hearing at which the kidnapers pleaded guilty, was the maximum under California laws, in view of the court's ruling there was no evidence of bodily harm to the victim. The sentence permits possibility of parole after 3½ years.

Had bodily injury been done their victim, it was pointed out, a death penalty, or life imprisonment without parole would have been possible.

While Gettle went before the Federal grand jury as its first witness, the State district attorney instructed his deputy to file kidnaping complaints against Joan Burke and Loretta Woody, who were captured with the men.

The Federal Court's move, it was indicated, would delay the transfer of the prisoners to San Quentin Penitentiary.

It retained heat for many hours.

JUST one month ago, we announced the production of Chestnut Farms–Chevy Chase Vitamin D Milk. Through its benefits to the families of our customers, we expect vitamin D milk to play a large part in the development of higher standards of health throughout this area.

For vitamin D milk combats and prevents rickets — delayed, improper development of bones and teeth in children. Often, poor teeth can be traced directly to this childhood malady.

Rickets is a disease brought on by not enough vitamin D. The treatment and prevention are the same. Lots of sunlight — and enough vitamin D foods in the diet. Most common foods are woefully lacking in this vitamin.

Each quart of Chestnut Farms–Chevy Chase Vitamin D Milk contains at least 400 U.S.P. vitamin D units (equal to 150 Steenbock Units). Its inclusion and its efficacy are approved by the American Medical Association. Chestnut Farms–Chevy Chase Vitamin D Milk may be used everywhere in place of regular milk. It looks and tastes no different. The potency of the vitamin D is not destroyed by cooking.

If you wish more information on the subject, we suggest you discuss it with your physician. He will explain its demonstrated value in the diets of babies and growing children, and to expectant and nursing mothers.

Chestnut Farms–Chevy Chase Vitamin D Milk costs only a cent a quart more than regular milk. The route salesman will deliver it to your door fresh every morning. To order, call DEcatur 1011.

Can a Compromise

—between what you want and what will suffice ever thoroughly satisfy you? We know the excuses the last several years have reared in your mind whenever you planned to buy something to wear—"A cheaper suit will do me."—"I can use the money for other things." But, now that these extreme exigencies are passing and conditions are beginning to appear better, will cheaper, inferior apparel give you half the pleasure, half the pride of ownership that is enjoyed by men who wear "apparel by Woodward & Lothrop?"

And the happy part about it all is—these superior things are really less expensive when you consider the length and quality of their service.

Cadet Called 'Lincoln of V.M.I.' In Leading 'Rat' Emancipation

Richmond, Va., May 16 (Spl.). Having taken the leadership among the cadets in abolition of the old "rat" system at the Virginia Military Institute, Cadet John P. Leary, jr., of Richmond, president of the senior class, has acquired the sobriquet of "The Lincoln of V. M. I.," because he emancipated the "rats." The "rat" system was that under which freshmen were hazed, the freshmen being the "rats."

Thus spoke Lieut. Col. H. M. Read, associate professor of English at the Lexington school, as he addressed the parents' night dinner of the V. M. I. Club here.

Describing in some detail the steps leading to the abolition of the "rat" system, and the substitution of a system of class privileges, Col. Read said that "some of the men were shocked at the action of the older men in making the change.

"I talked with some of the new cadets, and not a few of them interpreted the action of the older cadets as possibly meaning that they could not 'take it,'" Col. Read said. "Why, some of them told me they could stand a great deal more than was required of them under the old order."

Richmond, May 16 (Spl.).—When an early morning tourist's car hit a fire hydrant here today, cutting off the water supply to two big tobacco plants and giving a day's rest to 3,000 workers, it drew little sympathy from one city official. George H. Whitfield, director of public utilities, said:

Heavy Rains End Virginia Drought

Benefit to Tobacco Crop Outweighs Damage.

Richmond, May 16 (Spl.).—Heavy rains in Virginia during the last 24 hours broke a minor drought which threatened many crops, and caused the washout of a bridge on Route 10 which closed the route to Norfolk. The bridge was over Chipper Creek on the boundary between Surry and Prince George. Several secondary bridges also were washed out.

The steady rain greatly facilitated the transplanting of tobacco plants in southern and western Virginia, and otherwise brought a benefit to farmers far out of proportion to the damage reported.

In the tobacco country south of Richmond growers had been hauling water to the fields for the newly set plants, and today the wet earth greatly simplified transplanting.

Senator Reed's Nomination.

A great deal of political significance is being read into the decisive victory of Senator David A. Reed over Gov. Gifford Pinchot as the Republican Senatorial candidate in Pennsylvania. No doubt a considerable part of the analysis is justified. But the most important aspect of the contest seems to be the public approval extended to emphatic and courageous opposition to the New Deal.

Senator Reed has acquired the reputation of being a most outspoken opponent of present Administration policies. Without mincing words in his campaign, he attacked many different aspects of the New Deal, while his opponent virtually pledged himself to uncritical support. The position taken by Gov. Pinchot seems to have been utterly untenable. Even in these days of shifting political affiliations, a Republican candidate can hardly expect to obtain the indorsement of his party for fostering a Democratic program—at least not in Pennsylvania. Enthusiasts for the New Deal will naturally vote for Democratic candidates to continue it in operation, particularly since the Administration seeks partisan advantage in its policies.

The selection of a man to represent Pennsylvania in the Senate will not be completed until November. None can foretell how the tides of politics may flow at that time. But the voters of Pennsylvania have emphatically made known that they do not favor a Republican candidate who clings to the coat tail of the President. Fearless criticism has been rewarded. The naive superstition that any opponent of reckless experimentation is marked for limbo has been broken. Certainly in this respect the results of the Pennsylvania primaries are salutary.

Swift Justice.

The capture of the kidnapers of William Gettle was due to a lucky chance but their conviction within 24 hours of the return of the kidnaped man is an achievement for which the California authorities deserve great credit. By agreeing to plead guilty and accept sentences of life imprisonment, the criminals escaped the death penalty and the State avoided the delays that would have followed a trial.

To check the spread of lawlessness, swift justice is almost as essential as apprehension of the criminal. When months and sometimes years elapse between the commission of a crime and the final sentencing of the criminal, people lose confidence in the agencies of law enforcement. Lynching and other less deadly forms of mass vengeance are encouraged by the law's delays.

The example set by California shows that the State has learned a salutary lesson as a result of its recent hideous experience with lynch law. The public must be protected not only against criminals but against its own savage impulses in face of great provocation. The only sure way to give that double protection is complete assurance that the agencies of law enforcement are prepared to deal promptly and effectively with criminals after they have been apprehended.

Still An Adventure.

By dint of good fortune two aviators set their monoplane down on a sandy bank in western Ireland instead of in the Atlantic Ocean. After 32 hours in the air, en route from New York to Rome, the main connection between the gasoline tank and the motor of their plane had broken. To avoid fire they were forced to "cut off" the motor and land on the most available spot. If the accident had happened an hour sooner Capt. Pond and Lieut. Sabelli probably would have joined that high-spirited company of heroic pilots who have dramatically vanished into the Atlantic.

It will be seven years on Sunday since Lindbergh completed the first nonstop flight between New York and Paris. During that period no one has made a one-hop flight from this country to Rome. Many aviators have perished merely in trying to duplicate the Lindbergh feat. Wind, fog, ice and mechanical troubles continue to thwart courageous men and highly-developed machines. Transoceanic aviation has not made the progress that was glibly forecast as Lindbergh coasted down in France. Flying the Atlantic is still a stunt.

Every spring a new group of red-blooded young pilots is anxious to renew this conquest of the ocean wastes. But their experiences tend to confirm the assertion that the airplane has a severely limited range of usefulness. To remain in the air for 30 hours or more a plane must carry an enormous quantity of gasoline. It has little or no capacity for a commercial load, and the dangers of accident in uncertain weather are numerous. Large sums of money have been spent in attempts to develop air lines between the United States and Europe by way of Greenland and Iceland as well as the Azores. But the practicality of such ventures still remains unproven.

For the present transatlantic flying is confined to adventurous youths willing to match their courage, skill and good luck against the ruthless sea. When pilots in heavily-laden planes bearing romantic names disappear into the eastern horizon above Floyd Bennett Field one understands that it is adventure rather than sober commerce which really lures them on.

More Than Personal.

It would have been surprising if Senator Glass had regarded his elimination in the selection of conferees on the stock market control bill as anything but a "deliberate, gross affront." The little Virginian's sharp characterization of this overslick move, however, is not a sufficiently comprehensive description. When the President informed the conferees that he favors the House bill, suspicion was strengthened that Senator Fletcher was not acting solely on his own responsibility in ignoring Senator Glass. And it is of such unfortunate, yet inescapable, suspicion that much of the doubt as to the essential honesty of much recovery legislation is compounded.

The Senate voted for the stock exchange bill with the Glass amendments attached, providing for an independent regulatory commission, with complete discretionary powers over margin requirements. The debate on the proposal to substitute a new board for the Federal Trade Commission left no doubt as to the method which the Senate prefers. Consequently, if Senator Glass feels grossly affronted, what shall be said for the state of mind of the majority group in the Senate whose wishes may be nullified by lack of representation in conference?

Of course there is no way of proving the existence of a plot to surrender to the House on the controverted issues. But in view of the prolonged and embittered conflict which has been waged over the administrative provisions of the stock exchange bills, and considering, too, the acknowledged predilection of Senator Fletcher for the Federal Trade Commission, the procedure is highly suspicious. It will now be doubly unfortunate if the Senate conferees yield to the House and permit the Federal Trade Commission to extend its jurisdiction into a field which should be left to specially qualified administrators.

The mere suggestion that the conferees may have been selected with a view to enabling the executive branch of Government to override the expressed will of the Senate majority is a challenge to a responsible body of lawmakers. It would also be a confession of weakness on the part of the Administration to resort to such methods of securing legislative approval of its policies. But above all it would constitute an attack upon the independence and integrity of the legislative branch of government, setting an evil precedent that every self-respecting and far-seeing Congressman ought to resent.

Argument By Invective.

Former Senator Reed, of Missouri, was never noted for temperate expression. But in his denunciation yesterday of the campaign for American adherence to the World Court he pushed the emotionalized tactics of the prosecuting attorney to noteworthy excess. References to the "dead hand" of Andrew Carnegie as primarily responsible for the widespread advocacy of our membership in this Hague tribunal seem rather far-fetched. It would be more logical to lay the blame on a Dutchman named Grotius, who did a lot to develop the theory of international law three centuries ago.

The Carnegie Foundation, and other subsidized agencies, have unquestionably contributed to the strength of the movement for World Court membership by this country. But what has contributed most is the deep-rooted approval of the American people for the principle of judicial settlement of international disputes. That principle, and that principle only, the Permanent Court of International Justice exists to further. Its mechanism may be imperfect and its methods may be faulty. But to mix up the shortcomings of the tribunal with "the blood that stained the streets" in the Homestead riots is little short of preposterous.

For eleven years now the World Court issue has been before the Senate. In that time the movement for American membership has received numerous strong indorsements from bodies such as the American Bar Association, the United States Chamber of Commerce and the Federal Council of Churches, which have made independent studies of the question. All major party platforms approved membership in 1932 and within the past year nearly a score of State Legislatures have urged Senatorial action in the matter. Every President who has held office in the last 40 years has gone on record as favoring the principle involved.

There is, of course, ample room for opposition in an issue of this magnitude. But opposition, to be impressive, should be based upon logic and dispassionate argument. The movement is too important to be attacked by shallow denunciation and epithet. Such tactics, indeed, convey the impression that the opposition feels its position weak, and relies on emotionalism to conceal that feeling.

Sideshows An' All.

The camels aren't coming. They're already here—and the elephants, too, with all the brilliantly clad heroes who swing and flash like meteors on the flying trapeze, and all their daring and bedizened sisters who ride Arabian steeds, very barebacked. The Circus is in town.

There does seem to be a degeneration in the literature of circus publicity. Perhaps the rise of the radio and the mounting of the movie have lessened the taste for su[ch] reading matter. Those good old days [are] gone when big broadsides announced: "[Fif]ty Horses—Count Them—Count Them—50[0]!" That was advertising in the classic tradition, the [P.] T. and Gibbon (not to say Barnum) manner. Now there is less ballyhoo; or perhaps only more of it in less congenial directions. Still, the Circus is in town.

It has come for only two days altogether. It is asserted that a longer license is not granted because the circus takes more money out of Washington than it brings in. No doubt of that. Nevertheless, and if only for 48 hours, the Circus is in town.

"Bread and Circuses!" cried the Roman populace during a Roman depression. Well, better half a loaf than no bread—'tis better to have loved and lost the circus flavor than never to have loved it at all. There was Mother's Day last Sunday. Today is Children's Day—for the Circus is in town.

Politics In Business.

Through his amendment to the industrial credit bill, Senator Black has centered attention on one of the most important issues confronting the Administration. In his own words, "If the Government of the United States is to engage in any kind of private business, let it operate under exactly the same rules as those under which private business operates." The logic behind that principle is patent. Yet the amendment forbidding the use of political influence by those seeking RFC loans was adopted only after a spirited controversy. Several Administration stalwarts lined up against it.

The bill authorizes direct loans to industry by the Federal Reserve Banks and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Only $250,000,000 would be provided for loans of this character by the RFC. Senator Black estimates that applicants will seek to borrow about $40,000,000,000. How will the relatively small fund be apportioned among would-be borrowers? The Senator fears that tremendous political pressure would be brought to bear upon the RFC. "This is the most dangerous proposal that has yet been made," he declared, "and will work great harm unless some safeguard such as this amendment shall be thrown around it."

With equal logic, the same argument might be directed against the entire section of the bill aimed at putting the RFC into the commercial banking business. Private banks are burdened with surplus funds. Business and industrial enterprises which are good credit risks do not need to borrow from a Government agency. The chief argument for RFC loans of this kind is that they would subsidize a limited number of private enterprises unable to obtain credit if the principles of sound banking were followed. If Congress followed the "rules of private business" this whole section would go out of the bill.

The difficulty of keeping the vast enterprises undertaken by the Government free from politics and lax business practices has given rise to apprehension in the minds of most thoughtful citizens. In this case the Senate voted to exclude political influence from the negotiation of loans to industry, but it is by no means certain that that provision will remain in the bill. The Senate also attempted to uproot the spoils system in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but the House would not yield. There are many members of Congress who consider it a legislative prerogative to extend the Government's financial and business activities and then make use of them to promote personal political ambitions.

Generous—At Our Expense.

From one viewpoint the District appropriation bill passed by the Senate on Tuesday is accepted with satisfaction. It wipes out most of the inequities and inconsistencies written into the bill by the House. District schools, libraries, health facilities, &c., are allowed small sums for development as well as for maintenance. The Public Utilities Commission is saved from emasculation, and the Highway Department will be permitted to save the District a considerable amount by operating its own testing laboratory.

It is interesting to note the evolution through which the local budget has passed since the Commissioners estimated the needs of the District during the fiscal year 1935 at $36,954,858. The Budget Bureau trimmed these estimates to $33,454,843. In the House the supply bill was subjected to ruthless and careless slashing. It emerged carrying a total of $32,650,657. A more careful analysis of District needs in the Senate has brought the total up to $37,678,484.

While the Senate has greatly improved the bill, it is still weak in one respect of vital importance. The Senate increased the budget by more than 22 per cent over last year's appropriations. But it made no change whatever in the Federal contribution. As a result the District auditor estimates that expenditures during 1935 will exceed revenue by $1,500,000. This deficit can be absorbed by reducing the current cash balance. Nevertheless, it leaves the District in the position of spending more than it can expect to collect during the fiscal year. Instead of increasing the Federal contribution as the budget expands (this sum was previously reduced because the budget had shrunk), the Senate plans to maintain District solvency by cutting into our cash reserve. Obviously, such financing is fundamentally unsound and tolerable only as an exception.

No proper adjustment of the Federal contribution can be made in conference, because the House allowance was much lower than that of the Senate. The best the Senate can do is to avoid a compromise that would further reduce the $5,700,000 lump sum while necessary expenditures are mounting rapidly. With Congress thus encroaching upon the District's cash balance, early action to regularize the present haphazard and inequitable fiscal relationship becomes imperative.

Inconsistency of Congress.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Commissioners have had to reject already this year applications for construction of service sewers to the extent of $110,000 due to lack of funds. The cost of the installation of such mains is assessable against the property owners.

Congress, on the other hand, grants large sums to the Civil Works Administration for the "temporary" improvement of streets and alleys at the total expense of the Government.

If these mains were available, considerable construction would result therefrom, alleviating to some degree the need for the CWA. In some sections of the city, the demand for homes has been so imperative, septic tanks have had to be installed in lieu of sewer mains, the ultimate cost being considerably more to the property owners, who are later compelled to pay for and connect with the sewer mains when installed. Certain improvements can not be installed in the homes with the septic tanks, and they are far less desirable from a sanitation standpoint. Plenty of money is available for the construction of homes, but unless Congress makes appropriations sufficient for cooperation with private industry, we can not hope to reduce unemployment to the lowest level.

If the mains were installed the Government would be further benefited by increased assessments and more taxes.

A bill recently introduced in the Senate provides more powers for the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. What the Commissioners need more than increased powers is more money with which to indulge in some of the powers which they already have.

No Party to Back-Slapping.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The family and myself are enjoying The Post. We are glad to have a paper in our home not entirely devoted to Administration back-slapping. We are not in sympathy with the experimental-professional form of government now in force.

One is reminded of the man who "mounted his horse, and rode off in six different directions." He probably did not get anywhere either. It may be that this Democratic "hair shirt" will be good for us, in that, when it is all over, and the President has retired to where former Presidents retire to, and the professors have packed their bags of tricks, and gone back to their classrooms to teach Socialistic doctrines to our youths, the return to sanity, and the satisfaction of feeling that we are once more treading the paths of dignified, orderly procedure in government, will be such a relief that we will not be likely to want any more "new deals" for many years.

It is to be hoped that this experience will be a lesson to a large number of Republican voters who were tricked into going Democratic in 1932. H. C. BARLOW.

A Tribute From Afar.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This little message comes to thank you for the splendid notice concerning my musical setting of The Lord's Prayer, which appeared in The Post on Monday, April 23, while I was attending the convention of the National League of American Pen Women in Washington.

The article is masterfully written, the interest invited by the title being cleverly maintained to the last paragraph—which is not always possible when facts are so accurately and comprehensively set forth. May I compliment Hope Miller on her skillful handling of the subject?

A Question of Good Manners.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been interested in the recent correspondence in The Post in regard to smoking. My own attitude is certainly not tinged with the least fanaticism; many of my friends and relatives smoke and if they enjoy it I am glad.

There is developing, however, in the country an attitude which has been common in Europe for a long time and which is regarded as unfortunate by a very large group to whom tobacco smoke is disagreeable not on moral grounds but because of its odor and the physical effects resulting from its inhalation. Not only many women who do not smoke are seriously inconvenienced by smoke from the mouths and smouldering cigars of others in public conveyances and places of common resort, but many men are made uncomfortable also.

Particularly since the custom of smoking by women became general there has been noticeable a disposition to ignore "No Smoking" signs. I myself have seen women have to leave buses, being nauseated by the cigarettes of young girls. In day coaches, on trains and elsewhere women are smoking, evidently on the assumption that no protest will be made because they are women. But in some cases the men are beginning to do likewise on the assumption that it can not be annoying since the women now smoke also.

Surely smokers of good breeding will realize the importance of cooperating in securing for nonsmokers freedom from an odor which is frequently productive of headaches and nausea. It is simply a question of ordinary good manners.

FAIR PLAY.

Speed-Mad Motorists.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is encouraging to note individuals here and there who, through the columns of your paper, are voicing the sentiments of thousands of our citizens regarding the traffic situation in Washington. The surprising thing is that such conditions are allowed to continue in spite of the rapidly mounting toll list and the remedy patent to all who wish to find it.

One object only seems to posses the minds of the speed-mad motorists tearing round corners right and left, knowing officials will take no steps to protect the lives of careful drivers or pedestrians, who in fact, have the right of way over motor vehicles. Too much stress can not be laid upon this point of law recently brought out by your correspondent "Dumb Pedestrian." Doubtless few of the motorists who "bull their way around corners" ever heard of it. Talk of compelling pedestrians to cross the streets only at designated points will fall on deaf ears, so long as the Traffic Bureau continues to smile approval upon such law infractions.

MOTORIST.

Retrogression!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Keep on having big headlines about the drought. Maybe we can have that egotistical, self-assured godless crowd, who are attempting to make a fool of the people and a mockery of God's abundance, thrown out. We are just where we were when the Declaration of Independence was written in 1776. All you have to do is substitute President Roosevelt's name for the king.

MISS E. BRANDS.
Washington, May 11.

Women's Rights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Men often, even today in this modern age, claim woman's place is in the home and insinuate all women should be wives and mothers, which is a fallacy. Some women are not domestic-minded and are bored with the dull routine of housekeeping and also lack the maternal instinct and are interested in a commercial career more than in marriage and motherhood. The type of woman never should marry as she is apt to make a failure of marriage, whereas she often is successful in the business world.

All men are not expected to be physicians or carpenters, so it is absurd to expect all women to be confined to the one sphere of matrimony and maternity. As a feminist, I think women have the same right as men to carve out their destiny as they see fit, for they are human beings before they are women and have the same right for absolute freedom and liberty of action as men. The Value of Tradition.

(Excerpts from an article by H. M. Tomlinson in the Saturday Review of Literature.)

In the war to make the world safe for democracy, the first casualty was democracy; that fell vitally hit with the opening of gunfire. It was not even decently buried. It was kicked into a ditch. Away went all the safeguards, so laboriously gained, not only of health and home, but of the freedom to be as intelligent as possible. Over the greater part of Europe today those safeguards and that freedom have merged with the wreckage of the battlegrounds. We have retrogressed to barbarism. We have turned to the dark gods; to Juggernaut again. A new idea has become fascinating to men. They do not want liberty, and especially they refuse it to the mind. They have faith instead in a mystical doctrine that we should all be alike, that a community should act as one man. It is forgotten that when the Gadarene swine went down the steep place they went united as one pig. And the devil which united them was Fear. . . .

To me, as a rebel, tradition means a great deal. I do not think I can explain that; or not briefly. There is a story I recall of a master-mariner of the 40's, and that may help. He would make his barque's departure from a Cornish headland, bound toward the Hoogly. For two months he would not see land; not a loom of it. He would have to judge leeway, keep ever wary of his chronometers, solve his doubts of the compass. There would be the courage of his seamanship, his science in the use of the charts, in weatherlore, and in reading the sun, moon, and stars. He was a lonely man; the responsibility was his. He had to make a right course, as near as he could judge it, by the use of his mind upon all the discoveries of science in the navigation of a ship. There would be days when he would not have a sight of a heavenly body, while his ship was driving through a tumultuous gloom. To all appearance, he was lost.

One night that ship's master would appear on the quarterdeck, and say to the officer of the watch, "Send a man into the fore-rigging. The Hoogly light should be showing two points on the starboard bow." Up the man would shin; and he would be hardly aloft before he would cry: "Light on the starboard bow, two points!"

No anarchy there. No trusting solely to intuition and the divinity of the instincts. No deference to the mob. Only the bold and skillful use of the best knowledge, and an austere regard in solitude for honor of a tradition. He found the desired mark that way, and so discharged his responsibility to society.

The Post Impressionist

Circus Day!

Postoffice, Thursday.

ALL life, like all Gaul, is divided into three parts. There is the time when you love the Circus. There is the time when you don't love the Circus. And there is the time when you take the children.

* * * *

Do you remember "the night before"—in the first period?

Weeks ago—it seemed years—those men in white had put up the tempting bills, which only adults called posters. The men would douse long-handled brushes in buckets, swab the billboards, catch the upper end of a bill on the brush, slam the paper on the board, then irreverently slick the bill's surface with the brush. The paste splashed over your bare legs; but that didn't matter: you had thought for only the wonders and the beauties of the finally affixed picture—your first ideal of high art.

And now, at last, tomorrow would be Circus Day. Of course you were goin' down to see 'em unload. So how could you sleep? . . .

Through your sleep swayed elephants. . . .

There were pebbles hitting your window. There was Skinny, belout throwing them:

"Aw, come on! Wanna miss the whole thing?" . . .

In the railroad yards you edged, nearer than the rules allowed, to the closed menagerie-cars whence issued awful rumblings.

"Stand back there! Look out youse kids!"

Sleepy, touseled men were already sweating and swearing. The great unloading began. . . .

Faint music: "Here they come!" You were on Main street now. And here they did come.

The town's police-force came first: fat little Billy Wittick, in his rarely donned uniform, and fat big Sam Campbell in his, marching ahead. Behind them danced a row of pickaninnies from Toe-Hill.

And behind these official and unofficial manifestants of municipal welcome blared the band. . .

"Miff, you'll just have to take another helping of stew. There's plenty of time. You'll be sick, if you don't—filling your stomach up out there, the way you'll be doing, with all that lemonade. . ."

* * *

Tickets—tickets—TICKETS! . . . Try your luck with the rings; a prize for every man, woman and child who plays. . . . This way, ladies and gentlemen! Step right up! . . . The greatest side-show ever introduced to an intelligent. . . . And tell your exact weight or give you the gift of a beautiful cane. . . . An awe-inspiring and instructing menagerie of wild-beasts secured at tremendous cost and the risk of human life from every quarter of . . . Under which shell is the little pea now? . . . All for the small cost of ten cents or one dime. . . . Peanuts, peanuts, peanuts! . . .

Sweet lemonade
Made in the shade—

"Remember what I told you about pickpockets," says father.

Aw, why don't he let you come alone? You're big enough. . . . Meanwhile, here's the menagerie. . . .

Will he take you in the side-show? There is always a debate, each year. But you always win. . . .

* * *

Sawdust smell now, inside the Big Tent! Climbing up to your seat is as much of an adventure as climbing a crevasse-creased glacier must be:

"Look where you're going, Miff."

As if you weren't looking! Somebody'll hear, and laugh at you! . . .

But you arrive. You even have to wait a long while for the Grand Entrance . . . for the gentlemen in tights, for the ladies in spangled skirts, for the pawing steeds, for the heaven-high trapeze, for the silk-hat ringmaster as dignified as a diplomat and the clown who harries him. . .

Gosh, you didn't think anything could beat last year's circus—but this year's does! . . .

What's happened to you since then, that you don't want to go to the circus any more?

The posters are garish, their promises absurd. You don't like crowds. You don't like noise. You know well enough that the blonde, who leaps from one man on one trapeze, will be safely caught by the other man on the other trapeze. You're quite sure, without being personally present, that no tiger will escape its cage, that the lion's jaws will never close upon the curly head thrust between them. The ringmaster is a charlatan, the clown a bore. And as for the spangled ladies being beautiful—

We'll tell you what's happened to you. You're getting old. And not getting married and having children. You're getting old in the ugliest and meanest way for a man-of-the-world—alone. . . .

But what's happened to you now that you've been married all these years?

"Miff Junior, the lemonade's not as pink as it was when I was a boy, but I guess you'll like it. . . . Remember what I told you about pickpockets. . . . Oh, well, if you're going to kick up such a row, we'll take in the sideshow, too. . . . Look where you're going! . . . I wasn't clapping. At least, I was only clapping so's to make you look at that trapeze. . . . Yes, I know this ring's good, but don't miss this fellow in the middle here; he's great! . . . No, boy, don't thank me. Of course, I'm too old to care about circuses; but I'm glad I've given you a good day."

If this is your present manner of speech, we'll tell you what's happened to you: God bless you, you're growing young again!

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

NOTWITHSTANDING all of its ingenious devices for putting men to work, I am afraid it will prove to be utterly beyond this Administration's ability to keep Maj. A. V. Dalrymple employed. After two trials with the gentleman I am forced to the conclusion that when this depression is finally over and when all of the 13,000,000, including the lost 3,000,000 whom the economists have found were unemployed even during prosperity—when all of them have returned to work the major will still be out, a transient whom it is impossible to make stay put.

BARGERON.

If ever a man was a problem to his sponsor he must be. He was introduced to our midst by Senator McAdoo and placed in charge of prohibition enforcement at the outset of this Administration. If there ever was an opportunity for a fellow to rest up, draw his salary and keep away from the hazards that go with the spotlight the major had it. Prohibition enforcement at the time was a dead issue. The Administration was pushing repeal and State after State was voting it.

• • • •

But the major couldn't stand the quiet life. In the few weeks he was in office the country heard almost as much about him as it did about the banking crisis. In his blustering footsteps everywhere was a storm. Somehow everywhere the major went the wind blew up. He kept making so much noise, in fact, that the White House sent an emissary one day to find where it was all coming from and the major's dismissal was the result. He was the first casualty of the New Deal. He came in like a cyclone and went out like a breeze.

It was not very long before the word got around that the major had been eased back into a job, a job off the beaten tracks where he wouldn't be seen and could do no harm. It was as a special assistant to the Attorney General. Apparently Senator McAdoo was deeply obligated to him, and insisted that he be given something to do somewhere.

• • • •

It seemed as though he had learned his lesson, too. No one ever heard a word from him. As a matter of fact, only a few of us knew he was there. Rightly or wrongly, I had the impression that they slipped the major into his office early every morning before other people got up and slipped him home late at night. Because he had not proved an adornment to the prohibition enforcement office.

But the major hasn't learned his lesson at all. He is out again. A year of silence has been too much for him.

Yesterday he appeared before Senator McKellar's Civil Service Committee and charged that there was a plot, deliberately formed and being carried out, to keep Democrats out of the Government, that the plot was hatched in the home of Pat Hurley. Onto the front pages he comes again, he whom the front pages have never done any good, who, instead, has come only to grief from them.

• • • •

The Democrats manifestly are not getting all the plums they anticipated and, I think, unjustly, but if anything could be more absurd than the major's hallucination, it is the seriousness with which McKellar received it. And if you must have a plot there it is—a plot between the major and the Senator. Nobody has beefed more about lack of Democratic patronage than McKellar. Through his committee hearing he is now obviously out to agitate his complaint. But why did he drag the major into it? Or it is that the major would not have been left out for anything in the world. Emphasis was placed on the fact that he was subpenaed. This is intended to convey the impression that McKellar just happened to learn of the major's story and forced him to come up and relate it. This is an old trick which the major will learn fools nobody hereabouts.

Certainly the weird charges will not build up McKellar's case. More likely they will result in the Democrats' patronage being just one less. It is rather dangerous to have one subject to such hallucinations as the major's abroad in the Justice Department. While it was not, of course, one would suspect that it was he who sent the Attorney General on the ridiculous Mellon hunt.

Communist Ideals Jeered by Hitler

Soviet Union 'Flounders in Swamp,' He Says.

Berlin, May 16 (AP).—Chancellor Adolf Hitler derided the Soviet Union today for importing talent and machinery and compared it with a man wandering through a swamp clinging to the hand of a capitalist on a solid road beside him.

"If they were put on their own feet," he declared of the Russians, "and did not import engineers, workers and machines, we probably should see Russia collapse."

The chancellor, speaking before the German Labor Conference, asserted the Communist ideals were the most primitive in the world.

Parachute Saves Life Of Cadet at 4,000 Feet

San Antonio, Tex., May 16 (AP).—Cadet William M. Marks, jr., of Montgomery, Ala., student pilot at Kelly Field, saved his life by leaping with his parachute today when his ship went out of control 4,000 feet in the air, near Castroville, during acrobatic maneuvers.

Marks' jump was almost at the same spot and virtually the same time of day that two Kelly Field planes collided yesterday, causing the death of Cadet Preston A. Kennedy, Middleburg, N. Y.

Nudist Jailed

"One-Man Colony" Broken Up by Baltimore County Police.

Baltimore, May 16 (Spl.).—What police called a "one-man nudist colony" was broken up today by the arrest of Joseph Thomas in a thicket near Kingsville, Baltimore County.

For weeks there have been reports of a naked man in the woods in the vicinity of Kingsville, and today a report came that he had been seen back of a filling station. Police sped to the scene.

They rounded up Thomas and took him to the Towson police station, where he said he was from Indianapolis. He was sent to the city jail in Baltimore for observation. He said he is 28 years old, and gave no reason for his failure to wear clothes.

Westminister, Md., May 16 (Spl.).—The quarterly report of the Carroll County Children's Aid Society, made public by Miss Bonnie M. Custenborder, welfare director, showed that 52 children are being cared for by the agency.

This, according to the report, is an unusual number and is in addition to family welfare work the last three months. The report reveals that the agency has been aided by the local reemployment office, which has afforded work for 50 men and the enrolling of ten boys in the reforestation camps.

STUDY OF SOME NEW DRINKING RULES.

("The only stipulation in the New York liquor law regulations is that bars must not predominate and that the sale of liquids must be deemphasized in favor of solids."—News item.)

Customer (at the bar)—Good morning, Eddie. Nice bar you have here. A little predominant, but nice.

Bartender—On the contrary I don't think it is predominant in the least. I should call it a nonpredominant bar.

Customer—Oh, well, what is one man's predominant bar is another man's nonpredominant bar, so we won't argue.

• • • •

Bartender — Well, what's your pleasure, roast beef or a filet of moose?

Customer—I think I'll take a rye highball with ginger ale.

Bartender—You wouldn't be interested in a rye highball with homemade biscuits, would you?

Customer—Certainly not.

Bartender (who takes a liquor commission edict very seriously)—An excellent pick-me-up at this time of day is a porterhouse steak, some hashed browned potatoes, a loaf of bread and an old-fashioned cocktail.

Customer (sternly)—Don't be a woofus. I came in for a drink.

Bartender—Shush! Not so loud and abrupt! You can get a drink, of course, anything you want, in fact, but remember your emphasis.

Customer—What's wrong with my emphasis?

Bartender—It's entirely too liquid. You must develop an emphasis on your solids. What would the State liquor control board think if it found this was a bar where food was not a paramount thought?

Customer—I'm sorry, Joe. I don't want to embarrass the joint.

Bartender—You will please respect the regulations governing the sale of spirituous liquors, sir.

Customer (expiring of thirst)—Okay. What'll I do, Joe?

Bartender—You walk up to the bar and say, "I'm so hungry I could eat a horse. What have you got to drink?" And then I say, "We have some wonderful spareribs with mashed potatoes. How would you like a Manhattan cocktail?"

• • • •

Customer—Okay. I'm so hungry I could eat a horse. What have you got to drink?

Bartender—We have some nice fresh buffalo meat with onions, strawberry shortcake, apple pie a la mode and some bread pudding I made myself. I suggest you try a Martini medium.

Customer — I don't care for chicken salad and English plum soup. Give me a Dubonnet cocktail and make it strong.

Bartender—Okay, Harry!

Customer—Attaboy, Eddie!

THE LATEST RECOVERY RECIPE.

Plaster the ceiling and lay a new floor,
Fix up the barn, the garage and the store;
Paint up the homestead with four coats or five
And we'll end the slump . . . if the tenants survive!

'TWAS NO DEAL.

That crash of glass you just heard was Elmer Twitchell being tossed through the window when he offered the butcher a token payment on a $50 meat bill.

Congress not only put teeth in the stock exchange bill, but tossed in a buzz-saw, a hedge clipper and a lot of old razor blades.

The RFC has loaned money to a Mississippi shop engaged in manufacturing glue from sweet potatoes. Its chances of getting stuck would seem to be 100 per cent.

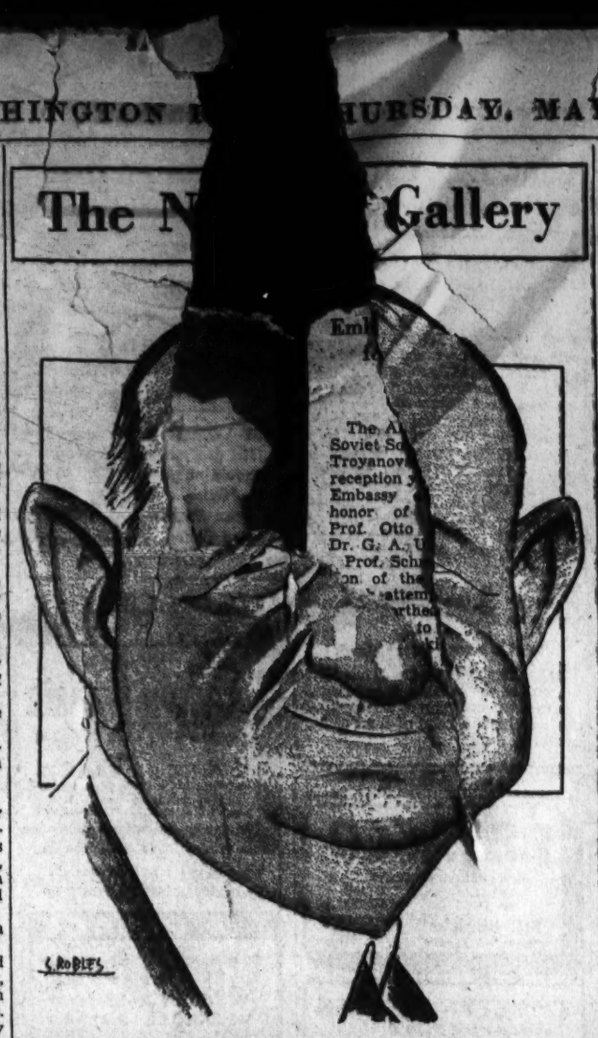
The N[illegible] Gallery



CARL VINSON, Representative from Georgia. Because he legislated for bigger warships, church groups and disarmament fans look on him askance. Admirals and even his enemies like him while knowing that he is the sharpest, shrewdest politico that ever cultivated a district. Before election, promised his home town gold braid. Maneuvered until Navy's biggest dirigible was named for it instead. Member Sixty-third to present Congress. Born on a farm 50 years ago in Baldwin County, Ga. Oratory undistinguished, but as effectively strong as any wire ever pulled. A modern Talleyrand. Hobby: Mixing political hemlock.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

The Deer Fattens in a Pen, But He Loses Much of His Spirit

By Robert Quillen

Men who go down to the sea in ships are unlike men who sit in the stalls of the money changers. They think different thoughts and have different ideals.

It is in the very nature of things that a man's standards and moods and morals and all of his reactions should be determined by his occupation and his way of living.

If this is true, it must follow that the modernized man has lost something vital and fundamental by quitting the ways of his ancestors. There are depths in his soul that modern life does not reach.

Consider the meaning of a camp fire. Through countless ages it meant safety and comradeship to uneasy men hurrying home through the forest at nightfall.

The camp became a house and the forest lane a street, but still the light in the darkness warmed the hearts of home-coming men.

To a tired and hungry man, coming home after nightfall, the mellow light in a window means welcome and love and rest and security, and he is a manlier man because its evidence of something won and owned ministers to his self-respect.

The blazing logs of an open fire meant something, also, and that is lost. Central heating, attended by a janitor or a thermostat, affords nothing more than comfort.

But the open fire was the achievement of a good provider. Tending it was a service to loved ones. And it was a symbol of hospitality and neighborliness and a settled man's love of home.

Working in the soil shaped a man's soul, also. One cannot turn the rich earth and plant seed and gather the field's bounty into barns for the winter without acquiring a serenity of spirit that city pavements and clattering machines do not give. The crisis of a moment does not stampede men who plant trees and wait for their fruit.

The civilization man made has remade him. Much that he fears and suffers results from his artificial way of life. And he will be much happier if he will escape the slavery that binds him to a machine.

Mass Meeting Is Scheduled

Democrats of Somerset County Organize; Keep Republicans Out.

Crisfield, Md., May 16 (Spl.).—The Democratic League of Somerset County, composed of more than 200 "regular" Democrats, will sponsor a mass meeting in the Armory here tomorrow, the first of a series of weekly meetings throughout the county, when Democratic candidates will speak.

Emerson C. Harrington, jr., Cambridge attorney and candidate for chief judge of the First Judicial Circuit Court, has been invited to address the meeting here.

An organization meeting of the Democratic League for Somerset was held in the Courthouse at Princess Anne recently at which time plans for future campaign and party activities were discussed. Dr. Stephen P. Fuller, president of the new club, scored the practice in vogue in Somerset for years of permitting known Republicans to register and affiliate as Democrats, thereby becoming eligible to vote becoming eligible to vote in the Democratic primaries in the county.

Dr. Fuller said, "They never vote the Democratic ticket at the general election, and we must do something to prevent their participation in our primaries."

Community Joins Graduation Fete

Martinsburg, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—The customary commencement day formula will be varied at Marlowe May 23, with a general community celebration in which the graduation of the junior high seniors will be a part.

The graduation exercises will be held in the morning when the six graduates, Esther Butts, Edith Lord, Lorraine Sprinkle, Theodore Landis, Robert Lowe and Hunter Ruble, will be given their diplomas. Superintendent Bessie D. Kilmer and Assistant Superintendent L. W. Burns will make the awards.

Following that will come a series of drills, a community picnic dinner and in the afternoon the crowning of the May Queen, the Maypole dance and the "Pose of the Posies" by the graduates.

M. O. Rouss Enters Democratic Race

Charles Town, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Milton O. Rouss, fruit man and farmer of Kabletown district, today announced he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the State Senate from this, the Fifteenth District, subject to the action of the voters at the August primary.

Mr. Rouss was a member of the House of Delegates from Jefferson County during the Cornwell administration in the 1919-1920 term. He has not held other public office, either State or local.

The seat to which he aspires is that now held by State Senator Robert White (Democrat), of Hampshire County. No other Democrat has so far announced for the race.

Veteran to Plead Insanity in Court

Danville, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—George Setliff, former service man who claims that he suffers occasional derangement as result of having been on board a torpedoed ship during the World War, went on trial today for the second time on a charge of wounding his wife, Lois Ferguson Setliff, in May, 1932.

Setliff was once convicted and sentenced to serve four years, but the court of appeals set the verdict aside and remanded the case for new trial.

The case hinges on the mental status of the man and several State alienists were on hand today to testify.

"Notorious" Gambling Cited at Martinsburg

Martinsburg, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—In his charge to the Berkeley County grand jury at the opening of court here yesterday, Judge D. H. Rodgers called special attention to what he termed "notorious violations" in this section of the State of the laws against gambling.

It is argued, he said, that the State has no right to interfere with the individual should he desire to venture his money on a game of chance, but the State law bans the race pool, lottery, &c., and it is the duty of a grand jury to make an investigation, as no other agency is available.

Masterlinck.

Tolstoi, who at the turn of the century, held by unanimous opinion the position of the world's greatest living writer, died in 1910; and the foremost place was thus vacant. Had any critic at that time suggested a list of the few who might properly be considered as candidates for the place, the name of Maurice Masterlinck would certainly have been included; and if a secret ballot had been taken, he would have received thousands of votes. Why is he so seldom mentioned today? How can so great a fame suffer a total eclipse?

Two years ago his seventieth birthday which ought to have been universally celebrated, passed practically unnoticed. A French dramatist told me in the same year, that if any one were making up a list of the ten leading continental dramatists, he would not include the name of Masterlinck, not because he thought him unworthy of a place, but because he would forget to mention him.

There are innumerable cases in the history of literature where a man has survived his reputation, but in nearly every instance the reason is obvious; his physical frame had more vitality than his works. But where shall we find a case like this? In 1914 Maeterlinck had a tremendous reputation, and so far as I can see, well deserved. Both to readers and to playgoers, he seemed a man of genius and cast a spell of magic.

Was he one of the casualties of the war? Did that vast world-upheaval in some way deprive his works of their compelling force? Of course it is true that his best productions all came before the war.

Or can a man's reputation be blasted by one lecture? It will be remembered that when he came to New York to give that unique lecture, he came with an immense reputation and left without it.

Now I believe the eclipse of Maeterlinck's fame is only temporary. I feel certain that his best plays will never die; I also feel certain that there will some day be a tremendous "revival" of Maeterlinck; he will be rediscovered; there will be a renaissance of his works.

Early in the nineties, when he was a young man, he was publicly saluted by the French dramatist, Octave Mirbeau, as "the Belgian Shakespeare." But while it is clear that he is not Shakespeare, do you suppose that the world will willingly let die such dramas (apart from the two famous operas made from his works) as "Pelleas and Melisande," "Interior," "L'Intruse," "Monna Vanna," "Sister Beatrice," and "The Blue Bird?"

Read him again, and see if the old magic has lost any of its power or charm.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

A WEEK-END in New York and Cambridge, just over, was no business man's holiday of constant reading. But I did hear a lot of chat about books, and I saw an author or two.

Not that I went an heavily for meeting authors; that takes time and the patience of a chamois-hunter. No—it is much easier, and even more fun, to have known them in their comparatively green and salad days. Then one feels with them that fresh, delighted, and perhaps even somewhat awed surprise in the world's praises.

• • • •

THEO. HALL.

In New York I concentrated—which is the only thing to do with one night in that multitudinous place—on a long evening's talk with Freeman Lewis, nephew of Sinclair Lewis. He works in the associated firms of Reynal & Hitchcock and Blue Ribbon Books, and was as full of publishing chatter as a hula skirt is full of straws.

Eugene Reynal, he said, is the brightest rising young man in the business. Reynal & Hitchcock had to accept the title "The Devil's Drummer" from the English publishers and didn't like it any better than I did. They had made, I learned, every effort to puncture the amazing stories in this book of Harry Browne's (even the horse-back ride from Mexico City to Rio de Janeiro) and were utterly unable to do so. They expect great things from Arthur Pound's recent return to fiction, "Once a Wilderneer."

• • • •

Passing rapidly on to Cambridge, I met there by chance Arthur Pound's daughter, a young lady who plays the harp and looks like all Irish beauties rolled into one. She loaned me a copy of her father's novel, which I shall report upon shortly.

At present, she said, he is working on two books. The first is to be called "100,000 Americans," a one-volume gathering of thumb-nail biographies. The second, as yet unnamed, is a bookful of reproductions from President Roosevelt's collection of Hudson River valley prints, for which Mr. Pound is writing the text.

• • • •

On Saturday occurred the annual dinner of the Advocate, Harvard's literary monthly. John Livingston Lowes was there, looking smaller, sharper, and more bird-like than ever. But his lion's voice boomed out just as astoundingly. His recent "Geoffrey Chaucer" is likely to become as much of a classic in its field as "The Road to Xanadu" was in the case of Coleridge.

Hoffman Nickerson, primed with the success of his study, "Must We Have War?" glared around him from behind his great gray walrus mustache and annihilated all arguments.

At dinner I sat next to Robert Hillyer. Rosy with the triumph of winning the Pulitzer poetry prize, he was declaring himself on the architects' business: "The depression pushed out the arty firms; the good firms are prospering more than ever"—and on war: "We didn't have to get into the war in 1917; we won't have to get into another, provided we shut ourselves off from the rest of the world." He showed me the manuscript of a poem he'd written that day on the needs of America. "We must cut back to the roots again," one line said simply.

But it was the pugnacious Bernard DeVoto whom I was most delighted to see again on this hegira. Having sat back awhile after his "Mark Twain's America," he had plunged energetically into a long novel and had just got through 250,000 words in five months. Little-Brown will publish all that in the fall. When he was planning the book in 1930 he had called it "Second Gentleman"—another title, as you can see, from Shakespeare. But that now seems inadequate, and his wife is leafing through the Bible, John Donne, and Mother Goose in search of another.

Since I last saw him, DeVoto had become great friends with Sinclair Lewis. It seems they happened to be going down together on a train to Philadelphia, and though DeVoto had written a rather caustic review of "Ann Vickers" for the Saturday Review of Literature, he crossed the aisle and introduced himself. Lewis, it turned out, had very much liked the review. The two clicked at once. Their mutual admiration society, I was told in other quarters, is something beautiful to see.

DeVoto holds the highly interesting theory that Lewis, point by point, is going to retract all his satirical stabs. "Work of Art" certainly presented the favorable side of Babbittry. It wouldn't surprise DeVoto at all if Lewis were to come out praising the small town (say Barnard, Vt., where Lewis summers) as the center of all that is finest and most ideal in American life.

On my way home I all but met an author new to me personally. In a diner roaring down the lower Hudson Valley—I prefer traveling by a corkscrew route—I was taking breakfast. The train was just passing through Tarrytown when Lowell Thomas, all bushy black pompadour and bright blue eye, came in and sat down across the aisle. Now self-introduction to an author calls for immediate mention of unbounded pleasure in his latest book. Racking my brains, I tried to think what Mr. Thomas's last volume could have been. But after he'd glanced at his New York American and taken his chilled orange juice at a gulp, he straightway got up and went back to his Pullman.

I dare say he had another book to do before getting into New York.

Westminster, Md., May 16 (Spl.). With about 350 members present, the annual spring meeting of the 19 Carroll County Homemakers' Clubs was held yesterday at Centenary M. E. Church.

During the morning session committee reports were read, including a statement by Miss Jessie Chenowith, county health nurse, which revealed that during the last year the number of children in the county found to be under weight had increased 20 per cent. Miss Chenowith requested that the club take steps to have defects in children corrected and cooperate in the annual drive for vaccination of children about to enter school.

Addresses were delivered by Miss Venia M. Kellar, State home demonstration agent, and Robert Unger, principal of Elmer Wolfe High School, Union Bridge.

Miss Kellar spoke on the advantage of extension work, while Mr. Unger talked on the importance of music, home economics and industrial arts in the school curriculum.

F. B. Bomberger, formerly connected with the extension service at the University of Maryland and now president of the Baltimore section, Farm Credit Administration, was the principal speaker at the afternoon session. Using as his subject "The Farmer Faces the Future," Mr. Bomberger asserted that "arousing of public interest is necessary for the advancement of agriculture" and the "farmers will be able to make the most progress through organization and cooperation."

Reports on club activities showed preparations under way for participation at the Carroll County Fair at Taneytown during August, where the clubs will arrange an exhibit of appliqued and piece quilts and homemade rugs.

Announcement also was made that a permanent exhibit of model furnished rooms will be opened here June 8 and that the annual "College Week for Women" will be held at the University of Maryland, June 18 to 23.

Mount Airy, Manchester and Union Bridge Clubs were awarded prizes in a vocal musical contest.

Author of Miami Pageant Receives Decoration From Borges.

Dr. E. Gil Borges, of Venezuela, assistant director of the Pan-American Union, will confer a Venezuelan decoration upon Dr. Barbara Ring in recognition of the historic pageant-drama, "Simon Bolivar, the Liberator," description of Venezuela, which was written by Dr. Ring and presented on Pan-American Day two years ago in Miami, Fla.

Dr. Ring, a descendant of Sir Walter Scott, is the author of several Latin American pageant dramas including "Cuba Libre," which was the major feature of this year's celebration in Miami on Pan-American Day.

After a stay of several months in Miami Beach, Dr. Ring arrived recently in Washington and is stopping at the Powhatan Hotel. After a brief stay here she will go to Arlington, Mass., to visit the Ring Sanatorium, of which she is the treasurer.

One Foundation Looks Tiny But Does the Work

This Girdle Grand for the Slim Whose Figures Need Little Restraint.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE tiniest girdle in the corset family looks more like a doll garment than anything else. And yet it is woven of sturdy material, in such a way that it both gives and takes, takes away the slight disfiguring bulges and gives a sylph-like slimness.

Too much avoirdupois in the region of the stomach or around the hips is a matter for control, if not by means of a diet, then by girdle support. A great many small women and girls admit a bit of extraneous control is exactly what they need, figuratively speaking. This very small combination of girdle and garter belt is not uncomfortable and gives a smooth roundness to bulgy builds. Few and far between are the women who would not appear better groomed wearing such a foundation, particularly under long, tight-fitting evening clothes.

The front of these little affairs are knit to make them porous. This makes them cool for summer but in no way weakens their control.

Tin Can Plants.

A tin can plant is an old and amusing contraption made from crepe paper and a coffee can. It would give a bit of color or a touch of the bizarre to den, bedroom, breakfast room, or boudoir. They are amusing to make. There are lots of bedridden convalescents who could while away the hours constructively working on these.

A local shop has some samples and gives direction booklets to all who want them. Such plants are simple enough to make. The can is cut in strips, the paper in petal patterns. All they need is a little twisting and creasing. The directions give seven easy steps. If they are followed carefully the miracle of a tin can turning into a blooming plant occur before your eyes.

Inexpensive Luxury.

The luxury of a bath may be enhanced with an inexpensive tufted bath mat. Stepping out of the tub, or shower onto a thin, damp towel takes the pleasure from a bath, which should be a time of enjoyable relaxation. But from the tub to the tufted mat, that is a pleasure!

The fact they are 88c a piece places them within budget shot of most shoppers. They are available in a sufficient number of colors to adapt them to any bathroom—green, black, lavender, gold, rose, all of these trimmed with white.

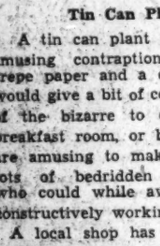
To Improve the Shape.

Some women know what a vast improvement eyebrow grooming makes in the face, but do not know how to go about "brow care."



They do not know daily brushing with an eyelash brush facilitates growth in regard to thickness and line. They forget one small eye pencil, if used with care, can change blonde brows to a becoming darkness, lend length to short, bushy brows and give the illusion of widening or lengthening faces that need either one.

It is possible to buy such a pencil and a transparent eyelash shaper at a downtown store. The shaper enables one to pluck the brows evenly and give them a lovely shape. Fifteen cents for pencil and tweezer guide together.

Coffee Any Time.

The new type drip coffee maker would be an ideal addition to the small but busy household. It fits over the cup and in a few short minutes turns forth excellent coffee.

Men who have breakfast before the rest of the family arises may pour boiling water into it before they shave. By time they have finished dressing they have a nice hot cup of coffee awaiting. Women who enjoy that 10 o'clock cup find it extremely convenient. Those who keep unusual hours, and like coffee for a pick-up, will find the dripper indispensable.

Dressing Up the Bottle.

A perfume with a symbolic fragrance is said to have a scent suggestive of all the romance of one evening in Paris, the city of high and low lights, of gallantry, wickedness, romance.

The perfume is put out now in blue 1-dram bottles, packed by the manufacturer. The only trim is a small tassel attached to the top.

Fifty-five cents a bottle now.

Dainty Yet Dashing.

Beads combined with fabric gardenias make the newest, daintiest, and yet most dashing stride taken in jewelry this season.

It is especially adapted to light, summer evening dresses for cocktail frocks. With loose flowing chiffons, or the more upright organdies, bracelets, necklaces and clips in this style make a delightful touch.

A particularly nice feature is the price. It's worth inquiring about.

Paprika Makes Hungarian Food Thing for Gourmets

Slav Chef in New York Restaurant Reveals Intricacies of Concocting Apple Strudel and Pork Chop Szekely.

We may go through the front doors into the parlors of the nations and admire their culture and art. How often can we walk through the back entrances into their kitchens and sample the art of their cooking?

Today a Hungarian chef introduces you to the characteristics of his country's cooking. This is the second of a series of articles on national foods and flavors.

By Susan Mills.

A MENU has been tacked on a billboard beside the door of a restaurant in New York's old Carnegie Hall. In the corner of the printed sheet are the words:

"Hungarian Cuisine."

The menu is covered with interesting titles. Questions arise: What is the real goulash? How is apple strudel made? What is a pork chop szekely?

Nothing to do but find out.

The chef is glad to explain. He is curly-haired and smiling. His name is Matthew Bernatsky.

"Yes," he says, "I know it sounds Polish, but I can't help it. I was born in Hungary.

In Praise of Paprika.

"The characteristics of our cooking? One, chiefly—paprika. You see, the best paprika is grown in Hungary. The soil is particularly suited for that purpose. The paprika is sweet, sweeter than the Spanish.

"Many people do not realize paprika must be cooked very carefully. If it is allowed to burn it becomes dark and bitter. Treat it delicately and it will add much to your cooking.

"Our wheat, too, is sometimes considered the best in the world. Climate and soil are responsible. And it is with this wheat we make apple strudel.

"The recipe? No," he shook his head, "I can not give the recipe cooking. We use, as the Russians because it is too hard to make and it takes a good native to make it right. But here is the way it is done.

"Of our flour we make a dough, and roll it very thin. It must be so thin that if you put a printed page under it you can read the words through. Then it is laid out on a cloth on a large table. Raw apples, sugar, cinnamon, chopped walnuts and raisins are sprinkled on the dough. Then one end of the cloth is lifted and shaken lightly until the dough begins to roll. The cloth is lifted higher and the strudel rolls down it. Then it is cut, baked and served warm.

Much Sour Cream.

"Yes, Americans like it. But they do not like all Hungarian do, a great deal of sour cream. Your people don't always take to it.

"Nature adjusts many things in cooking. Cream for instance. It becomes sour in warm climates, and many southern countries, South America, Mexico and the Orient, use it in their kitchens. It is good for the digestion too, when the heat is high.

"Hungarian cooking has been influenced by other countries. During the Crusdaes our cooking became highly cultivated. Educated people from Poland, Germany, Turkey, sifted through and left behind them aristocratic recipes and culinary methods. The Turks brought the paprika and other spices we use now."

Suddenly he was serious. He said, thoughtfully

"I don't mean to criticize, but Americans don't know how to eat. They are stingy with their food, and extravagant with their drinks. It is out of proportion. Why don't they make an event of a good dinner?

"But you will want a recipe. Here is a favorite of the Hungarians."

Paprica Chicken.

Fry one onion quickly and carefully in butter until it is golden brown. Add 1 teaspoon paprika, fry a few minutes, being careful it does not burn. Clean and cut a three-pound chicken in small pieces and add to mixture. Salt and roast under cover for 35 minutes. Add a half-pint sour cream, heat and serve.

Pork Chop Szekely.

Take a whole chop and fry in a sauce of butter, lightly fried onion, paprika, a little chopped caraway seed and garlic. When meat is almost done add some raw sauerkraut, and cook together for 15 minutes. Add sour cream, heat and serve.

Next week we cross the mountains and water to Syria, and watch the women grind the wheat and chop the meat for the national dish of the country, just as they did thousands of years ago. Watch for the third of this series of articles on the same page next Thursday.

Nut Strudel Is Delicious Variation of Hungarian Apple Dish.

By Susan Mills.

THE Hungarian chef may hesitate to offer a recipe for delicious apple strudel dessert, but if your fingers itch to make it, here is a simple variation of the original strudel theme that should bring you success.

Nut Strudel.

Make a batter of a half pound fine flour, one egg, salt and warm water. Work it up thoroughly with the hands, then leave it half an hour under cover, keeping warm. Spread a cloth on a table, lay the batter on it and roll as thin as paper. It must be transparent.

Beat four eggs and 2 ounces butter into a froth, spread on the batter, sprinkle with sugar, ground cinnamon and a quarter pound of finely chopped nuts. Fold or roll over by gently raising the cloth, lay in well-buttered pan, brush with melted butter and bake in moderate oven. Serve warm, with or without sour cream.

Here is a dish that is a national favorite with the Hungarians.

Halass-le.

Select two or three kinds of fish: carp, pike, eel, or others. Clean, soak, cut in pieces, and let stand an hour. For 2 pounds of fish cut two small onions in thin slices, fry lightly in butter until yellow, add a teaspoon paprika and cook a little. Lay the bits of fish in a casserole, pour over the sauce and a little sour cream, a little vinegar and fish broth. Stew slowly, stirring carefully from time to time. When fish is cooked remove the pieces. Beat the yolks of two eggs, add to the broth, add butter and lemon juice. Beat well over the fire until frothy and serve with the fish.

Beware Self-Deprecation as You Would Deceit, She Warns.

NEW YORK, May 16 (Spl.).—Girl graduates in seeking jobs should beware of the old feminine sense of inferiority, believes Dean Virginia C. Gildersleee of Barnard College.

In an address to members of the senior class, Dean Gildersleeve warned the young women against self-deprecation, which, she declared, they should "shun as conscientiously as deceit." She pointed out that graduates of men's colleges usually were full of confidence and expected to find jobs awaiting them on silver platters.

"However, girl graduates," she said, "often are afraid to try for positions worthy of their abilities."

"The prospects for the college graduate seem better this year than last," Dean Gildersleeve asserted.

"Financial experts tell me business is improving," she said. "I don't know that it is going to improve very steadily. Such a lot of reconstruction has to be done in this country. It is not a settled prosperous world you will go out into."

Dean Gildersleeve emphasized the importance of membership in large organizations. "These are chilly days for rugged individualists," she said. "Unless you are a temperamental genius, don't be a lone individualist."

What Today Means

"Taurus."

If May 17 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 1 to 3 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 6 to 8 a. m., from 4 to 6 p. m. and from 10 p. m. until midnight.

If a woman and this is your birthday, congratulations, for this is a day that should prove to be a lucky one for you. Fortunately, you are of the type that inspires men to have a great deal of confidence.

The child born on May 17, as it grows up, will pass through a stage where it will have the unhappy faculty of getting into all sorts of harmless little scraps. This will be due to its fondness of playing pranks. There will be nothing malicious or mean about this child, only an unusual amount of mischievous humor which must find an outlet. The only solution will be to develop a sense of humor yourself, and exercise patience.

The man born on May 17 probably in some other life kissed the Blarney Stone, and on arriving on this mundane sphere brought its gift along, for he, as a rule, has certainly the gift of gab. If this is your natal day, you should be in a line of business or a profession where your natural ability to talk can be used advantageously.

May 17 should prove a busy day, as well as lucrative, for those who have anything of a legitimate nature to offer for sale.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Spitting Still Dangerous.

This is the season when promiscuous spitting is most harmful.

In those circumstances spitting is still potentially harmful, but the degree of danger is greatly lessened. The disease germs in the foul expectoration do not long stand exposure to direct sunlight and to the drying effects of hot air.

There are vehicles for the spread of contagious diseases other than spit, even for the spread of those in which the mouth and nose are the gates of danger. Kissing is one, crowding, and especially night crowding, is another, and there are still others. But for certain of the diseases of this group spit is the most important vehicle of transmission.

The oldest inhabitant can remember when communities ran anti-spitting campaigns. The first use of the word crusader (in preventive medicine) was its application to those who crusaded against spitting. The danger and the nuisance of the filthy practice is far less than it was during the period of these crusades. For that matter, the danger of consumption and other contagions is less than it then was. There has even been a moderate decline in the pneumonias.

But the time has not come to stop crusading and to let the practice of reckless spitting go unrepressed. We still have consumption and pneumonia, and as long as we do the reckless spitter is a public enemy.

I WAS A SPY!

By MARTHE McKENNA

"I AM brigade headquarters intelligence officer, Roulers area," he began. "Recently I was ordered to pay special atention to the matter that leakages of information were regularly passing over to the enemy from this district. The first clew I obtained was when over a period of several weeks we intercepted certain code messages. The bearers refused to speak. When decoded, these proved to be signed with the letter 'L.' I thought at first that these must have come from a woman, and a known enemy agent, Lucelle Deldonck, whose present whereabouts could not be traced, but whose name was entered in our files as dangerous. I thereupon caused test decoy messages to be sent. The result of this was that I became satisfied that the sender could not have been Lucelle Deldonck.

Old Reports Searched.

"My next step was to search the old reports regarding the Lucelle Deldonck affair for information about her friends. I found that Martha Cnockaert, who was working in the German hospital, appeared to have been associated with her, although there was no direct evidence against her, and her conduct had been favorably reported upon by the authorities. The intercepting of the messages signed 'L' took place about midsummer of this year. Nothing further accrued and I was able to find no evidence that Martha Cnockaert was the mysterious 'L.'

"Then on November 25 of this year it was reported to me by a soldier that when passing across a piece of ground in the town where an important supply dump had only a month previously been destroyed by explosions, causing a fire—the subsequent court of inquiry were able to find no reasons for these explosions—he noticed some Belgian children playing around a hole in the ground. This hole had a cleverly camouflaged lid and had been accidentally discovered by the children. Upon examination I found that this led into an underground passage, and it had obviously been made through the roof of the passage to give some person or persons egress to the site of the dump.

"From the elaborate nature of the work which had been necessary for this purpose, from the jumble of footmarks in the dust on the floor of the passage and from the finding of a sack of tools which had been dropped, I judged that more than one person was concerned. Another exit to this passage, also apparently made recently, was found beneath a wooden hut in the hospital grounds, which lie outside the town. This naturally turned my attention to the staff at the hospital. Martha Cnockaert, being a Belgian, was obviously the most suspicious character, but I was assured by the oberartz at the hospital that she was above suspicion. She had recently been let off work at the hospital, but was still there at the time the dump was destroyed.

"It was just after I had left the hospital that my gefreiter came to me with a gold wristwatch which he had picked up in a corner of the passage near the dump opening. I found that it bore the initials M. C., which might stand for Martha Cnockaera. It occurred to me that the owner of the watch, realizing that it had been lost in a compromising spot, might be reluctant to reclaim it, and this, of course, was essential for my case. With the connivance of the town kommandant, I prepared a little ruse, which is of no importance to this court, but which in 48 hours had the desired result of bringing the owner, apparently quite unsuspicious, to claim her property. It was Martha Cnockaert. Late in the day I proceeded to her house and conducted a thorough search of the whole premises. In the bedroom of the accused, concealed in a loose strip of wallpaper behind the washing stand, I found the two code messages the court has before it. The code signature beneath these represents the letter 'L,' and is the same as on those messages I intercepted during the summer. I knew, therefore, that I had the right person."

The prosecutor arose and asked: "What was her demeanor upon being arrested?"

"She did not deny my accusation. As a matter of fact, she assented to my charges, although I got no direct admission."

The president said, "I thank you, Herr Lieutenant." The officer stood back, saluted and left the courtroom.

The soldier who had discovered the hole on the site of the dump, the gefreiter who had discovered the wristwatch, and another gefreiter who had heard me claim it in the town kommandant's office followed immediately with the evidence. Then there was a pause and a rustling of papers as the court whispered among themselves, and my two code messages found in the bedroom passed from hand to hand.

The president looked up at me. "Are these notes in your handwriting," he put quietly, clasping and unclasping his fingers. I refused to answer.

The keen-faced Oberartz from the Roulers Hospital came silently into the room. After being sworn the president informed him that it was very much against the usual procedure, but that after conferring together, the court had decided to hear the evidence of the Oberartz.

"I am Oberartz at the Roulers Military Hospital. The accused has worked untiringly and unsparingly under my command for many anxious months, and has always shown great attention and a merciful bearing in her work. I have come here voluntarily to testify to her good character, and her ceaseless endeavors to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded countrymen."

The prosecutor arose and questioned the Oberartz.

"Would it surprise you to know that the accused has confessed to her guilt?"

"The guilt or the innocence of the accused as proved by this court does not concern me."

"How long did she work under your direct supervision?"

"The whole of the period she was engaged at the hospital, and at all times her work was voluntary."

Profound Impression.

A profound impression seemed to have been made on the court. Two other doctors from the Roulers Hospital followed the Oberartz. In each instance the prosecutor followed the same lines as practiced on the Oberartz, but they just as easily refuted his vile insinuations. After anxiously conferring with two senior officers at the table, the president rose and addressed the court.

"Sentence will be promulgated in four days. Remove the prisoner, and clear the court," he ordered.

• • • •

As in a dream I was marched into the same room that an eternity ago I was tried in. The president was sitting at a smaller table with two of the senior officers of the council. Terse orders rang out behind me, and a deathly silence ensued. The president slowly arose and taking up a paper addressed me:

"It is a terrible thing to condemn a fellow creature, especially when that creature is a woman; but you have been the cause of the deaths of many of my countrymen during the many months of your nefarious activities. The sentence is therefore that at an hour and place to be appointed later, you be taken out and shot to death!"

The unter-offizier, standing stiffly to attention, shouted so that the room rang:

"Judgment in the name of his imperial majesty! Present arms!" With a steady pace we marched back to the cells, and it seemed as though I was in another body, watching the receding figure of the woman prisoner between the gray-clad guards.

The tragic farce was played out! A special wardress had been assigned to me since I had been condemned. She moved in and out of my cell like a robot gargoyle, neither speaking, smiling nor showing she was indeed human. For her I was a number so soon to be put out of existence. I was not allowed to communicate with the outer world. A German priest, a kindly man, visited me, and I made my peace with God and man. Then unexpectedly the priest came to see me again.

"I do not want to raise any false hopes, my child," he said, "but I really think there is just a chance you may escape the death penalty."

Stares Blankly at Priest.

I stared at him blankly. The idea had never crossed my mind. The faces of the president and the officers on that terrible morning had been as though graven from steel, grim and unrelenting.

It needed all my will power to stop the insane laughter that bubbled to my lips. I found my fingers tearing the cuffs of the prison uniform. Presently after a few more kindly remarks he left, while I threw myself down on the bed and strove to make my mind a blank. Yet the priest had been right. It was a kindly thought to warn me, for if I had heard nothing of the reprieve till the official announcement, maybe I should have gone mad.

Next morning the old scenes were reenacted, but this time with a new meaning. Again there came the stamp of feet, the clack of rifle-butts on the stone flags. Bolts were shot back and the same officer faced me as he who had originally taken me before my judges. This time he threw me a smile.

"Please to come, Fraulein. The court awaits."

Again that short passage up the stone steps, through the corridor, and into the room where only a day or so ago I had listened to nails being hammered into my coffin. This time there were but two officers, and my fears were quickly put at rest. In a formal tone the old president read over the charge and the sentence, though my heart stood still when he repeated the dread words that I was to be shot to death forthwith. Then he turned to me.

"Do you understand what I am saying?" he asked. "The Commander-in-Chief of Areas under Occupation has graciously consented to commute this death sentence into one of imprisonment for life. He has been guided in this by the fact that you had been awarded the Iron Cross for meritorious work in the field, and also owing to the special representations made on your behalf by the authorities at Roulers. Have you anything you wish to say?"

June Brides to Wear Ethereal Haloes

The Simple White Satin Classic Is Best for Bridal Gowns.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, May 16—She's going to look more innocent and angelic than ever . . . the June bride. As she walks up the aisle you're even apt to see a halo round her head.

To be sure, this halo will be of misty net, tulle or mousseline or filmly lace.

The most-in-fashion gown is still the traditional white satin cut on classic princess lines similar to the sketch.

Its long sleeves are closely fitted or made with a quaint, soft puff up near the shoulder.

Necklines are usually the simple high boat shape or high square

Formal enough for the church wedding are the heavy crepes and sheer, delicate laces with net backgrounds.

Where the bride is classically simple, the bridesmaids are equally fluffy ruffly. Arms are bare but shoulders covered. And very often this year that covering is a separate shoulder capelet.

Circus Is a Good Life, Agree Girl Performers

They Have a Pretty Domestic Time of It, What With the 60 Children That Travel With Them; It's Healthy—Early Hours and Exercise.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

A PAIR of tights and a clown suit flapped on the clothesline in happy harmony. Indeed, they seemed to do an impudent little dance in time to the melody floating out of the big tent behind them.

Within that tent thousands of spectators had gathered to pay tribute to Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey's star performers. Devout circus fans wriggled and writhed in ecstatic discomfort as they tried to keep an eye on dancing elephants, uproarious and daring trapeze performers all at once. Indeed, they carelessly ran the risk of becoming hopelessly crosseyed or permanently double-jointed—and loved it.

But just the other side of that tent, where the clothes flapped so gaily in the sun, the scene was as domestic as a kitchen apron.

Domestic in Tights.

A woman in pink tights was industriously cooking supper, setting the dishes on neat luncheon cloth, wondering if the spinach was done. Another was busily washing.

Marie Maximo, a little Cuban girl who even at close range looked 16, but who admitted she had been married 14 years, took time off from her typewriting to tell something about circus life back of the big tent.

"We are too busy to be always falling in and out of love and getting divorces," she said, "maybe that is why I have been married so long. Isn't that terrible? Fourteen years."

Marie explained she was writing a letter to one of her club members.

"She is a trapeze artist, but she is out for a month," she said, "she has a new baby. We are all anxious for her to hurry up and bring it back with her. Children in the circus? Of course, many of the performers travel with babies. There are 60 children in the circus, many of them only 3 years old are learning their acts now."

Organized for Help.

The club of which Miss Maximo had spoken is called the Pirates Club. "We organized it to help other people," explained Dorothy Herbert, bareback rider and president. "We have fun, too. Sometimes after performances we have lemonade and sandwiches. Of course we never drink. At least I never heard of a circus performer who would even drink a cocktail. If they did, they would probably fall some night. I can't tell you as much about the circus as some of the other performers. I am new, I have only been here seven years."

But Rosie Rieffenack, bareback rider, said she was born in a circus and intends to die there.

"I love it," she said. "My father and mother and grandfather and mother were circus people in Hungary. I would die if they made me leave it. I learned to ride when I was 3 years old."

"Afraid," asked Concho Pope, who a half hour before had been doing an amazing dance suspended by her teeth in midair. "No! You can't be afraid in this business. Besides, there is nothing to it."

Regular hours, plain, good food and plenty of exercise, especially the latter, accounts for their good health, the circus girls believe.

"It is a good life," they agree.

Divorce Laws To Be Studied

D. C. Women's Bar Association to Make Survey, Looking for Reform.

A STUDY of the divorce laws of the District of Columbia looking to recommendations for reform will be made by the Women's Bar Association during the ensuing year. The association at present is cooperating with Council of Social Agencies in the drafting of legislation designed to assist the courts in handling cases for probation. It is also actively cooperating with the new Legal Aid Bureau, which is directed by one of its members, Miss Beatrice A. Clephane.

The aims and purposes of the association have been explained by Mrs. Ellen Spencer Mussey, first president, as follows:

"We must as women stand for the recognition of the value of service rendered without regard to sex and it is for the stronger to help the weaker to receive proper recognition in the way of salaries and wages. As pioneers in your profession, you have special responsibilities, and in this world crisis you will have unusual opportunities for advancement and for service. May you all prove equal to the demands and opportunities of the present age."

She Attack[illegible] Germs And Finds [illegible] Standard Test

War Is Scientific Preoccupation of This Peaceful Bacteriologist; She's Worked on Lockjaw and Food Poisoning, Scourges of Fighting and Civilian Populations.

Women today are fighting in the front ranks in the battle of the century, that of science against sickness and suffering. The following is the first of a series of articles telling of women scientists in Washington who are making important contributions to medical advance.

By Mary Greiner Kelly.

IF there is another war—or for that matter, even if there isn't—injured humanity will suffer less because Dr. Ida A. Bengtson, pioneer woman bacteriologist with the National Institute of Health, dabbled around in serums. Although Dr. Bengtson is the personification of peace, except when she meets germ enemies in microscopic battle, war has found a way of insinuating its gory head into many of her scientific dreams.

First came her gas gangrene assignment. It was during the World War when she served her country by testing the potency or sterility of antitoxins used in combating certain dangerous wound complications. Gas gangrene stood at the top of the list.

Alone in her laboratory, Dr. Bengtson attacked the problem scientifically. She entered into a series of experiments that took endless patience and hair-breadth precision.

Finally she emerged with a standard test for controling the insidious Welchii organism, most prominently present in gas gangrene. Her unit of measurement was enthusiastically accepted by biological firms the country over. Recently the entire scientific world became her "yes man" on the same score. The health section of the League of Nations adopted her Welchii antitoxin formula as the international standard.

War grinned through her window again when she worked out tests on serums for tetanus or lockjaw, from which many wounded died during the Civil War, and many suffered cruelly during the World War.

Next came her work on botulism, food poisoning, which flourished in the United States during war time. Through tests she proved conclusively the sources of poisoning that carried off whole families.

No Serum Found.

"But death comes so quickly in food poisoning cases," she explained in an interview yesterday, "that no serum has been found yet to counteract the effects. Scientific discovery to date would have been entirely negative had it not been for the widespread publicity given those war-time cases."

Dr. Bengtson's interest was aroused in botulism after she had occasion to unhorse a high riding theory held by a St. Louis doctor in regard to infantile paralysis. He had observed what he thought to be this disease in chickens, and believed it was transmitted to human beings through the medium of a green fly. Dr. Bengtson proved through laboratory tests the disease was not infantile paralysis but botulism.

"Proving another wrong isn't any fun, though," said the blue-eyed, smiling scientist. "The thrill for the scientific explorer is only in positive results, whether attained by himself or another."

Fun? Ah, yes, Dr. Bengtson finds plenty of it right in her laboratory. With enviable imagination, her workshop often becomes a miniature playground and the task at hand an exciting game. It is "fishing" she likes best, and with reason. In this "sport she is one of the few bacteriologists to have mastered the intricate technique known as Barber's single cell isolation. Her pool is a tiny droplet containing millions of "fish," her hook, a fine glass pipette drawn out to a hair's-breadth.

"The method," says Dr. Bengtson, "is to divide the droplet pool into still smaller pools, and by the process of elimination and the grace of God to land a single 'fish' into a single 'pool.' Transferred into a culture medium and put away in an incubator the 'fish' multiply by billions and a pure line culture of bacteria may be obtained."

Pursues Elusive Germs.

The "hunt," too, intrigues this sport-loving bacteriologist. At present, her days are given over to the pursuit of two elusive germ bodies. The first is rickettsia, associated with typhus fever and Rocky Mountain spotted fever. The second is the phantom germ which causes trachoma, a disease of the eyes.

Commonly known as chronic granulated eyelids, trachoma has spread with disastrous results through the mountain sections of several Southern States, as well as numerous Indian reservations. Ultimately causing blindness, the condition became such a problem in the Ozark region of Missouri several years ago that the Federal Government was appealed to for help.

As a result of the appeal, Dr. Bengtson was detailed to study the disease at the Trachoma Hospital, Rolla, Mo.

Her work later took her up into the backwoods towns of Missouri, Kentucky and Georgia and to the Indian reservations of the Southwest. From each excursion she brought back valuable information.

The apparent inability of the germ to flourish except in living tissues, however, has proved a disheartening stone wall to Dr. Ida's laboratory study of the disease. But being a sportsman, and a scientific one, her associates are wagering she'll find a way to hurdle it.

Senate Snapshots.

SEVERAL of our most picturesque statesmen were on view at the hearing in the Senate caucus room yesterday morning. Ham Lewis was looking more ferocious than usual behind his pink whiskers. Senator Borah wore the peculiar shade of brown suit he has made famous this year. Kindly Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada, was presiding genius. Oratorical James A. Reed, of Missouri, was the first speaker against America's joining the World Court.

• • • •

Mr. Reed was quite annoyed with the heat-lightning effects of the photographic brigade and finally protested.

"Please wait 'till I'm through," he said, "I can't talk while I'm being photographed. I'm a modest man."

• • • •

Who ever saw Mr. Reed when he couldn't talk, and at length? He took up nearly half the time of the hearing with his speech yesterday. Mrs. Reed, looking extremely smart in a shiny new sailor hat and frock of shades of dark blue, with accessories to match—as the saying goes—sat quietly on the side lines. She patted the Senator's arm when, after his speech, he sat down beside her.

"Princess Alice."

"PRINCESS ALICE" LONGWORTH, in a dark blue suit with checked collar and a dark blue hat, had just been ostentatiously seated by an attentive guard when Mr. Reed said:

"I still think Theodore Roosevelt had some sense."

Lady Shows Speed.

MRS. LOWELL FLETCHER HOBART, of D. A. R. fame, sat down front alertly listening. Nobody would ever have guessed she had been reached by telephone yesterday when shopping in Athens, Ohio, and so caught a train literally at a moment's notice, reaching Washington in time for the hearing.

• • • •

"I did have a tooth-brush with me," she chuckled, "and "I'll have to finish my shopping here, I guess."

Nothing to Say.

REPRESENTATIVE FLORENCE KAHN, in a black and white print and carrying her customary bag of large proportions, sat in the midst of the general audience, surrounded by several congenial spirits. She chuckled frequently and one could see her sending her witty, barbed comments to the right and the left every so often.

• • • •

When approached before the meeting, she suggested she was interested in thinking of "America First," but later requested her detailed comment be taken "off the record."

• • • •

Improved Nursery Decor To Be Apparent in Show

Federation of Woman's Clubs Will Sponsor Display of Sixteen Modern American Bedrooms, to Be Held Here Next Week.

INDICATIVE of the trend in individualism is the room especially designed for the child of today. Fifty years ago he rarely had a bed of his own. When he had outgrown his cradle he was tucked into a large bed with other children in the family, as much for the sake of warmth as for conservation of space.

But in this present day of furnace heat, well-informed mothers, and child psychiatry, the right of the child to a place he can call his own is recognized. Every piece of furniture in his room has been designed with the idea of teaching him independence. His walls, floor, windows have been decorated in colors and designs that will appeal to him during adolescence as well as babyhood.

A reproduction of one of these new-fashioned nurseries will be an important part of an exhibition of 16 modern American bedrooms at the Willard Hotel on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. The District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs is sponsoring the exhibit which will be formally opened at 8 o'clock Monday night by Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, first vice president of the federation.

Open Each Night.

The sixteen model rooms, including bedrooms for debutante, bachelor, guest, young girl, and master of the house, will be open each night until 10:30 o'clock. On Tuesday and Wednesday the exhibition will begin at 11 o'clock in the morning.

The child's room, more than any other, has a vital part to play in molding the character and habits of its young inmate, believe many mothers. They have learned one of the best methods of teaching independence is to have the child take care of and be responsible for his own things. Modern American furniture designers have given impetus to this form of teaching by placing drawers in nursery furniture low enough for the child to look into them so he can arrange his own clothes and toys.

Practicability is also considered in planning the nursery of today. The furniture is metal that will withstand kicks and bumps of exuberant romps. Corners have been rounded so young bodies will not be bruised easily. Pieces to fit the child's needs until he has reached maturity are selected. Chairs are so constructed they encourage good posture.

The babyish pink and blue color schemes have been superceded in the modern child's room by such unusual color groupings as red, white and blue. The white may be kept spotless as metal furniture can be washed easily and quickly.

No More Frills.

In fact, all the modern American furniture is built for cleanliness as much as for beauty of a striking, simple sort. No longer does the debutante live in a nest of fancy period furniture, frilly bedspreads and curtains, be-ribboned doodads for hairpins and other knicknacks. No longer does she have prom favors and dance programs dripping from the dresser's mirror.

The girl of today prefers furniture with curved, slithering lines to the elaborate curlicues of the past. She wants bold, clear colors in place of the lavender and pale green combinations that formerly intrigued her. She wants comfort more than faded elegance. And she insists upon furniture that can be kept spotless, from the shiny meal top of the dresser to the straight legs of her favorite lounging chair.

Probably no one appreciates the change in furniture and interior decorations so much as the house guest. Any one who has had to spend a good 15 minutes in removing a fancy bolster, a complicated mountain of little pillows, and a ruffled net counterpane before he could retire, simply revels in the ease with which present-day bedrooms are managed.

Demand—No Supply.

By Katherine Smith.

Trade your dimes for diamond's glitter,
Trade your purse for pearls.
If you need it, buy your beauty,
Trade your cash for curls.

Buy your nails and buy your lashes;
Women never need be plain,
But I hope there will be some day
Stores where one can buy a brain.

"Mrs." to You, Woman's Party Members Say

They Advocate the Title for All Women, Single or Married.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THE MODERN woman often boasts there are no more rivers for her to cross in her triumphant march on man's prerogatives. She now smokes, votes, visits barber shops and cocktail bars, often earns more money than her husband, frequently evades the responsibilities of motherhood. But whether she realizes it or not she is still just an old-fashioned clinging vine where the title of "Mrs." is concerned.

Those with a legitimate right to the title hang on to it for dear life. Even the year-old decree of an etiquette dictator that a married woman should be known as "Miss" to her business associates no matter if she had had as many husbands as a movie star, has failed to influence Washington business women. They refuse the title that denotes single blessedness.

The National Woman's Party, usually addicted to feminism, becomes downright feminine on this one subject. It advocates the use of "Mrs." for single women as well as married ones. Members of the party point out that a man is referred to as "Mr." whether he is a crusty old bachelor or the chief support of a harem. They believe there should also be a uniform title for women.

To Save Embarrassment.

Since "Miss" might be a bit embarrassing to the mother of several children, "Mrs." is the best solution to the problem, believe the members. They also maintain "Miss" is an infantile term meaning "little women" and is a diminutive of the dignified title used for married women.

"The word 'Miss' implies a woman has not attained the full stature of womanhood," says the National Woman's Party. "Yet a wifeless man is not addressed by a diminutive. He is not called a 'little man.'"

So far as can be learned, however, none of the party's single members has taken unto herself the title of "Mrs." A few of the married ones are rather insistent about being called "Miss."

In spite of the etiquette books and the National Woman's Party, Washington business women and their employers have never departed to any great extent from the use of "Miss" for unmarried women and "Mrs." for married ones.

"We always refer to a married woman employe as 'Mrs.,'" said a member of Woodward & Lothrop's personnel staff yesterday. "We've found married women prefer it that way. And there doesn't seem to be any good reason for calling them 'Miss' even if the etiquette books do say we should." The idea of calling single women "Mrs." had never occurred to the personnel staff.

They "Mrs." Them.

The Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., which employes about 25 women, has the same custom as Woodward & Lothrop's. Both firms use the Christian names of married women. Thus it is Mrs. Mary Jones, never Mrs. Robert Jones. This, too, is usually because the women prefer it to their husbands' full names. Evidently most of them are like the old maid who married so she could have "Mrs." engraved on her tombstone. As soon as the modern woman has gotten across the fact she has or has had a husband somewhere in the background she is willing to let it go at that.

Married women began using their Christian names when they entered politics. The practice made them seem more independent, efficient, self-reliant, also established them more definitely as individuals. All women members of Congress use their Christian names, as do most women in important Government positions.

The title "Mrs." is neither an asset nor a liability in the business world today, according to Miss Nelle Ingels, president of the District's Business and Professional Women's Club.

"I think each person should be permitted to make her own decision as to whether she will be called 'Miss' or 'Mrs.,'" said Miss Ingels. "But I can't understand why a married woman would want to be referred to as 'Miss,'" she added.

Men's Summer Clothes Casual

Sloppy-Smart Is Idea for Country Wear; Evening Standards Discarded.

NEW YORK, May 16 (AP).—This summer the wind of fashion will blow men right back into their second childhood.

The watchword is "get out that old gray bonnet, with the blue ribbon on it."

Old clothes, baggy clothes, tweedy clothes and a couple of pairs of swimming trunks are about all the young or elderly man will need in the country, judging by the trend this spring.

Sanction has been given for rough materials, odd coats, comfortable slacks, polo shirts, wool socks and leather sandals for the daytime's lounging, golfing or gardening.

For evening wear also practically all the old standards have been discarded. Mess jackets, white double-breasted dinner coats with black trousers, red sashes and green sashes—almost anything goes, if you like it.

The best guide in the matter of color is a birch tree in the Adirondacks in the fall.

Top it off with a blue-tab collar shirt and a black tie, maroon wool socks, white buck shoes and don a brown felt hat with a black band, and all your friends will think you have just graduated from college.

THERE will be no bedrooms like the one on the left at the exhibit of modern American bedrooms here next week. Robert E. Lee was born in this room. See his trundle bed in the background.

GIVEN a bedroom like the one on the right, your modern child should soon develop self-reliance. It's part of an exhibit of modern American bedrooms open to the public at the Willard Hotel next week.

Stock Trading Cut in Volume To 1934 Low

Prices Drop Six-tenths as Sales Decline to 717,404 Shares.

New York, May 16 (AP).—Trading in stocks dwindled today to the smallest volume recorded on the stock exchange this year, while the market drifted in an atmosphere of uncertainty.

Turnover on the big board was only 717,404 shares. Tape watchers were unable to suppress yawns as the tickers stuttered spasmodically, stopping at intervals for lack of transactions.

Minor losses outweighed gains at the close. The average price of 90 stocks closed six-tenths of a point lower at 75.9.

Heavier Tone at Close.

Early firmness in stocks gave way to a heavier tone later as the market found itself unable to extend yesterday's moderate recovery. Prices sagged listlessly toward the finish, such leaders as U. S. Steel, American Can, Pennsylvania, General Electric, General Motors, Chrysler, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Bethlehem Steel finishing fractionally to a point lower.

What little speculative interest there was in the market centered in a few stocks. Declaration of the regular $2.25 dividend on American Telephone & Telegraph common failed to help the stock or the market generally. It finished fractionally lower, having rallied earlier in the week.

Silver shares ran into selling before the conference between representatives of the Senate silver bloc and the White House scheduled at Washington. U. S. Smelting & Refining yielded for a net loss of 5½ points and American Smelting, Cerro de Pasco and Howe Sound closed more than a point lower.

Cut in Biscuit Dividend.

National Biscuit was shaken by an unexpected cut in the quarterly dividend to 50 cents, from 70, and dropped more than 3 points to a new 1934 low. On the strong side of the list, American Sugar Refining, Hazel Atlas Glas, Monsanto Chemical, Continental Can and Atlantic Refining were outstanding, but trading in them was small.

Mixed business news, a desire to wait the final draft of the Federal stock exchange control bill, labor unrest, finding expression in scattered strikes in various industries, and drought news from the farm belt contributed to stagnation in the stock market.

Wall street, which has been hoping a special commission would be chosen to administer stock exchange control, was disappointed when President Roosevelt threw his weight behind the House provision to give the Federal Trade Commission authority.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Picture of the Mortgage Business Painted by Walker Is Unsupportable by Facts and His Conclusions Are Unwarranted.

By Ralph West Robey.

In connection with the new building program of the Administration, Mr. Frank C. Walker, executive director of the National Emergency Council, presents in an official statement a picture that, if it is true, is quite appalling in its implications. Before it is accepted, however, it is well to look at some facts.

He says that "much" of the total real estate mortgage debt of $43,000,000,000 "was created under the unsound financial practices that prevailed during the boom conditions of 1922-29." Further, that "these unsound practices are now universally recognized and discredited." The "most detrimental" of such practices and the only ones he lists were, (1) "financing new construction through the use of second mortgage financing at exorbitant costs," (2) "charging excessive fees, in addition to high interest rates, for renewal of maturing mortgages," and (3) "making long-term loans on a fictitious short-term basis."

Now all of these practices unquestionably were indulged in between 1922-1929. All of them, too, have been indulged in from the first days of mortgage lending in this country. And all of them are undesirable. This, however, is not the question. Mr. Walker implies that these practices were the dominant way of doing business in the '20s—that the existing mortgage debt is characterized by having been made under such conditions. In other words, Mr. Walker's statement is a blanket "smearing" of the entire mortgage business, and as such is used as an argument for the Administration's current proposal.

Such an Implication Is Belief by Statistics.

In view of Mr. Walker's official position, such a charge is worthy of attention. In 1928 (the latest figures immediately available to me) the total farm mortgage debt of the country was $9,500,000,000. Of this, $2,200,000,000 was held by insurance companies—organizations that do not lend on second mortgages; that seldom, if ever, charge a bonus for renewals of mortgages; that lend at a reasonable rate of interest, and that rarely make mortgages of under five years and in 1924 had over 22 per cent of their holdings with maturities of 10 to 30 years.

Another $2,134,000,000 of the farm mortgages were held by Federal Land Banks and Joint Stock Land Banks—institutions that are under the direct supervision of the Federal Government; that can not lend upon other than first mortgages; that by law must charge a relatively low rate of interest, and that have scarcely any mortgages with a maturity of less than 30 years.

Another $1,000,000,000 was held by commercial banks—organizations that do not charge bonuses as a rule, do not charge exorbitant interest rates, and that in the case of the National banks are prohibited by law from lending for more than five years.

Here, then, is over 50 per cent of the total farm mortgage debt that can not possibly be placed under the implication of Mr. Walker.

Urban Mortgage Field Even More Against Him.

The objection may be made to this that it is only part of the picture and that Mr. Walker was thinking of the urban mortgage debt. Here, however, the facts are even more against him. Of a total debt of $27,600,000,000 in 1929, $22,300,000,000, or over 80 per cent, was held by building and loan associations, life insurance companies and banks—none of which are open in an appreciable degree to the charges he makes except that of keeping the debts on too short a maturity.

It seems to me, therefore, that it is reasonably clear that there is no justification for Mr. Walker, by implication, charging that the whole mortgage business of this country is little short of a "racket." And when he accompanies this charge with the statement that "owing largely to these unsound practices" mortgage lending virtually has ceased and this in turn has caused "our largest industrial problem and our largest unemployment relief problem." I can not help but wonder whether he views all economic reasoning, as well as statistical facts, as pernicious tools that must not be permitted to influence his conclusions.

Bond Ma... Moves ... In Late ...

...o's Prices Slightly ... Session

Little Liquidation Develops as Sales Decline to $10,738,000.

New York, May 16 (AP).—A modest late rally enabled bonds to close somewhat higher again today, but the trading volume was still below normal as neither traders not investors exhibited any pronounced inclination to expand their commitments.

Transfers totaled only $10,738,000 par value, against $11,077,000 yesterday, and the average for 60 domestic corporate issues advanced three-tenths of a point to 85.7.

The list milled about in an indecisive manner most of the day, with only a few specialties attracting any attention. The extreme dullness of stocks apparently was a retarding factor, but there was little liquidation developed. News of exceptional interest to the market was meager.

Among Rail Gains.

Among some of the more active rails with gains of fractions to a point or more were issues of Santa Fe, Central Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio, Burlington, St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Erie, Hudson & Manhattan, N. Y. Central, Nickel Plate, New Haven, Pere Marquette, Frisco, Southern Pacific, Southern, Union Pacific and Wabash.

The better utilities and industrials included loans of Warren Bros., Utilities Power & Light, Postal Telegraph, International Telephone, Consolidated Gas, Columbia Gas, Certain-teed, American Water Works, American Rolling Mill and American & Foreign Power.

Mild improvement was registered by the majority of U. S. Government securities, although dealings here were also light. The Treasury issued $100,000,000 of three and six months' bills at new record discount rates.

Bank Bids Explained.

That some banks bid par for these bills was explained by the fact that bank reserves invested in Treasury securities are exempt from State capital stock taxes, and for this reason various financial institutions were willing to forego income.

The foreign section, for the most part, was dull. The only feature here was unusually heavy trading in Rhine-Main-Danube 7s, which spurted 17 points on transfers of 152 bonds.

Market Closes Irregular; Transfers Decline to 132,000 Shares.

New York, May 16 (AP).—The curb market closed narrowly irregular today in the dullest full trading session this year. Transfers approximated only 132,000 shares, against 149,000 yesterday.

Final quotations generally showed fractional changes, although a number of inactive specialties varied a point or so. Metals were a bit easier in sympathy with a heavy tone of that group on the big board. Oils were irregular, while leading utilities showed no definite trend.

Electric Bond & Share 6 per cent preferred soared 7¾ on a nominal turnover, but the more active common shares finished a shade lower. American Gas & Electric was off ¼ of a point.

Lake Shore, Humble Oil, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Wright Hargreaves and Safety Car Heating yielded fractions to around a point. American Cyanamid closed up 1 in active buying, while Aluminum Co. of America, Fisk Rubber and South Pennsylvania Oil showed similar improvement in lighter dealings.

World Trade Developments

(Based on radiograms and cablegrams to Department of Commerce.)

Some accentuation of the improvement in Newfoundland conditions was evident during the past month and renewed confidence has caused freer spending.

Domestic adjustment and recovery in Australia continues, but oversea market conditions have become less favorable for Australian products.

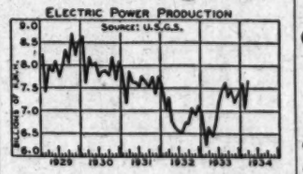
The improved financial position of the Chinese government has been reflected in the strength of security quotations; railway construction and improvement by central and provincial governments is fairly active; the impoverishment of farmers in the Harbin region has become a matter of concern to authorities.

Markets for Philippine abaca and copra have become somewhat firmer and the announcement of a surplus in government accounts last year has restored confidence to some extent; business in Manila has been stimulated by the Far Eastern Olympic games.

Conditions in Lithuania failed to show material improvement but the trade balance in the first quarter was slightly more favorable than in the similar period of last year.

Several branches of business in Hungary show gains as compared with last year, with agricultural prices stronger, industrial production larger, freight traffic heavier and foreign trade more active, and sentiment has improved markedly.

Power Production Rises During Week



New York, May 16 (AP).—Electric power output in the United States showed an increase last week compared with the previous week. Total production as reported by the Edison Electric Institute today amounted to 1,643,433,000 kilowatt hours, compared with 1,632,766,000 kilowatt hours the week before.

The improvement last week over the like week of 1933 was 11.9 per cent, compared with a rise of 13.7 per cent the week before.

Regional gains from 1933 for last week were: New England, 9.1 per cent, against a rise of 13 per cent the week before; Middle Atlantic, 7.7 per cent, against 10.2; Central Industrial, 15.5, against 16.3; West Central, 8.7, against 6.5; Southern States, 7.6, against 11.5; Rocky Mountain, 25.5, against 26.8; Pacific Coast, 16, against 15.3.

A. T. & T. Co. Votes Regular $2.25 Dividend

$42,000,000 Is Payable July 16 to 680,000 Shareholders.

New York, May 16 (AP).—Directors of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. today declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.25 a share on the captal stock. Similar disbursements have been made snce 1921.

The dividend is payable July 16 to stock of record June 15. It calls for a distribution of about $42,000,000 among the company's 680,000 shareholders.

Financial quarters had expected the usual payment, although recent gossip in Wall street circles suggested some uncertainty on maintenance of the $9 annual rate in view of the drive for downward revision of telephone rate schedules in several sections of the country.

Since 1931 the company has drawn rather heavily upon reserves to keep up the $9 payment, but the trend of earnings has been improving since the fall of 1933. Last year the company earned $7.37 a share and in 1932 $7.82 a share.

For the first quarter this year earnings were equivalent to $1.77 a share. With the upturn in earnings the company reported that the Bell System had shown a net increase of 108,000 telephones and an 8 per cent gain in toll and long-distance calls for the three months ended March 30.

This expansion followed a gain of about 85,000 telephones in service during the last four months of 1933. For the entire year 1933 the company had a net loss of 630,000 telephones compared with a net loss of 1,650,000 stations in 1932.

The National Biscuit Co. has declared a quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share, payable July 14 to stock of record June 15. This places the stock on a $2 annual basis compared with the $2.80 annual rate in effect since 1930.

American Ship & Commerce Corporation reports a net loss of $227,165 for 1933 against net loss of $192,563 in the previous year. For the four months ended April 30, 1930, net loss was $210,827.

The Seaboard Oil Co. of Delaware today declared an extra dividend of 10 cents and a regular quarterly disbursement of 15 cents, both payable June 15 to stock of record June 1. The company made similar extra payments last March and in December, 1933.

Trade Trends.

(Associated Press.)

Wool goods — Business has declined in all branches of the market, and some trade authorities estimate current volume as the smallest in several years. Some call is reported for cheap woolens and manipulated fabrics.

Hides—Spot prices continue to soften under fairly heavy offerings. Further transactions in the Chicago market brought the price of light native cows to a range of 9-9¼ cents a pound. Heavy native steers sold at 10 cents.

Pig iron—With foundry operations along the Atlantic seaboard at 40 per cent of capacity, the movement of pig iron has fallen to unusually low levels, according to producing sources.

Chemicals—Products used in the textile industry are moving in smaller volume. The price of tin crystals has been lowered in sympathy with the recent decline in the metal.

Foreign Markets.

London—Cheerfulness was maintained on the stock exchange today. Gilt-edged securities, German bonds, transatlantic issues and Kaffirs improved, but oil shares and home rails declined. The latter on disappointing traffic reports. Argentine rails were ½ to 1 point lower. The market closed steady.

Paris—After opening strong, prices on the bourse weakened owing to losses in such French issues as Citroen and Michelin. Rentes strengthened slightly on the good showing made by the government at the opening of Parliament. The closing was heavy.

Berlin—Although the opening on the boerse was more cheerful, business was small, and the market closed weak.

Wheat Climbs 2⅛ to 2⅝ on Crop Damages

Spring Belt in Northwest Hit Again by Dust; All Grains Up.

Chicago, May 16 (AP).—Sensational crop damage reports from the spring wheat belt Northwest, together with word of a renewal of dust storms, rushed wheat prices skyward late today.

Compared with low levels touched earlier, the wheat market ran up 4 cents a bushel, most of it in the last 15 minutes of trading. Late stampedes to buy wheat followed receipt of dispatches from a leading crop expert that South Dakota drought conditions between Aberdeen and Yankton, 240 miles, were deplorable, and that practically no crop of wheat could be raised there this season.

Preceding the outburst of buying which shot prices aloft at the last, the wheat market had dragged lower largely because of uncertainties resulting from proposed Congressional measures toward drastic further regulation of commodity exchanges and from forecasts of possible moisture relief tonight or tomorrow in the spring wheat belt.

Wheat Closes Buoyant.

Wheat closed buoyant near today's maximum figures, 2⅛ to 2⅝ cents above yesterday's finish; corn, ⅞ to 1⅛ advanced; oats, ¾ to 1¼ up, and provisions 2 cents to 12 cents gain.

Adding to the late upward impetus of wheat values were authoritative reports that irreparable damage to crops had been done by drought from the Colorado border through western Kansas to the Oklahoma Panhandle.

An important feature, too, some experts said, was a pronounced rise in temperatures Northwest. As high as 90 was reported at points in Montana, 92 in South Dakota, and 94 in Canada. It was asserted that temperatures of this kind, even for a short time, would necessarily be destructive to crop prospects over large areas both sides of the Canadian line, because of extreme dearth of moisture, surface and subsoil as well.

More Unfavorable Reports.

Today's late crop advices from the American and Canadian Northwest were generally regarded as the most unfavorable yet received this season. This was especially the case relative to news of dust storms in the Edmonton district of Alberta Province, Canada, a decided surprise to the trade, as that area was believed to have had ample moisture. Other reports said that in Manitoba Province the soil had drifted to such an extent that roads could not be kept clear, even by scrapers, and that crop conditions in the prairie provinces as a whole were rapidly approaching the situation which prevailed in 1931.

Corn and oats swayed with wheat, rallying sharply in the late dealings. Receipts of corn were about a sixth of the total at this time last year.

Provisions responded to upturns of hog values and of grains.

U. S. Experts Battle Apple Orchard Pest

Tests Conducted Near Martinsburg, W.Va., by Scientists.

Nontoxic Spray Sought to Save Growers Millions.

Martinsburg, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—One phase in the Nation-wide fight toward extermination of the coddling moth, which preys on fruit trees and costs orchardists millions of dollars annually, is being carried on at an orchard near here by the United States Department of Agriculture, it was learned today.

The local work is connected with the attempt to develop a nontoxic spray material to replace arsenic of lead, so far the only poison found which kills the coddling moth worm, but which often remains on the marketed fruit.

The U. S. Department, working with the States concerned, is setting up three major experimental projects—one on the West Coast, one in the Central States and the third at University Experiment Station, Kearneysville, W. Va., where the work for the Eastern apple regions will be done.

First step was to lease half of the 40-acre Ralph Border orchard, a mile from Kearneysville. On the leased acres a complete set of experimental work will be carried out under at least two Federal specialists, working with Edwin Gould, assistant entomologist at the experiment farm, who has been "loaned" by the State for the experiment.

Special new experimental spray machines have just been obtained, including a bean sprayer with a 400-gallon tank, divided into four compartments, carrying 100 gallons each. With this machine four different sprays can be applied rapidly and evenly.

The Border orchard will be used for an extensive variety of tests of various materials, especially the nonpoisonous ones, in the two seasons ahead. The experiment is to terminate in July, 1935, according to present plans.

Director F. D. Fromme, of State Agricultural Experiment Station, declares the experiment is the most extensive attempted in eastern West Virginia. It is being financed almost wholly from Public Works Administration funds. The aim is to develop spray materials nontoxic to humans, to abolish washing, residue testing and troubles of that type, which are exceedingly and increasingly expensive to apple growers. Before deciding on the Kearneysville farm for the eastern United States experiment, agents of the U. S. Bureau of Entomology considered the opportunities in all apple-producing States in the belt, finally selecting the Kearneysville station because of its advantages.

Beckley, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—County officers today reported the second jail breaking of Henry Youngblood, convicted robber, who escaped here a month ago and later was recaptured in Winchester, Va., and returned here.

Youngblood sawed through a cell lock and three window bars. Officers are searching for him.

The escaped man was being held here awaiting his transfer to the Moundsville Penitentiary to begin serving a term of one to ten years for a robbery.

Allegany Leaders Backing Jackson

Baltimore, May 16 (Spl.).—Four leaders of the Democratic party in Allegany County, all opponents of Gov. Ritchie for a fifth term, called upon Mayor Howard W. Jackson today at the City Hall here. Mayor Jackson is opposing Ritchie for the Democratic nomination.

The Allegany delegates promised the mayor their support in the primary. The callers were Joseph Craddock, a Cumberland business man; Fuller Bernard, former State's attorney for Allegany County; James Shriver, Cumberland banker, and W. L. Reinhart, of Cumberland.

Tomorrow Mayor Jackson will go to Hagerstown for a conference with Washington County Democratic leaders. Harry W. Nice, a Republican candidate for the gubernatorial nomination, also will be in Hagerstown tomorrow.

Man Fighting Arrest Killed By Troopers

Levels Rifle at Officer as Tear Gas Forces Him From Home.

Clarksburg, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—As he leveled a rifle at Sergt. E. S. Duckworth, State trooper, after being forced by tear gas from a bedoom in which he had barricaded himself, William E. Rogers, 45, was shot to death by the officer today at the Rogers' home at Big Bend, in Calhoun County.

The sergeant, another trooper and the Calhoun County sheriff had gone to the Rogers' home to arrest him on a charge of felonious assault. He was alleged to have beaten his wife and to have driven other persons away from his home. State police were asked to go to the place with the sheriff in response to a call for aid.

Rogers resisted arrest, the officers said, and barricaded himself in his bedroom. When he was forced out by tear gas bombs, the officers said, he pointed his rifle at Duckworth and the sergeant shot him.

Luray, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—FERA assistance was given to two young women transients today, who said their names were Mrs. Helen Martin and Mrs. Mildred Scutter, of California.

The young women were brought to Luray yesterday by a police officer from Shenandoah, following four days spent in the jail there after they were taken off a freight train.

The women said they were wives of Navy men, and they were on their way to Washington to await their husband's arrival with the fleet, now en route East. They started from California in a car, they said, and were wrecked in Texas. From there on they had hitchhiked to Roanoke, where they got on a freight train and rode to Shenandoah. The relief agency here sent them on their way.

Templars Hear Dr. H. W. Battle

Virginia Conclave Told World Needs Quiet, Meditations.

Charlottesville, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Speaking tonight at a service at the First Baptist Church, the opening event of the 112th annual conclave of the Grand Commandery Knights Templar of Virginia, Dr. Henry W. Battle, widely known Baptist minister, asserted that the age is desperately in need of a chamber of reflection.

"Knight Templarhood requires that the candidate for its revelations and personal fellowships shall experience a season of solemn meditation, alone with an open Bible and the symbols of mortality and soul-cleansing before he is deemed fit," he said.

"Never has the admonition of the Psalmist, 'Commune with your own heart upon your bed and be still,' been so vitally important as now. For lack of it, the note of reverence is fading out of the music of life, and when that is gone the melody will be gone—and all will be gone."

Tonight's service was presided over by Dr. Thomas W. Hooper, grand prelate of the grand commandery. Musical numbers were rendered by the choir of the First Baptist Church, and brief remarks were made by the pastor of the church, Dr. Henry Alford Porter.

The opening business session of the conclave will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at the Elks Home. Right Eminent Grand Commander Byrd Leavell, of Culpeper, will preside.

Convoy Advocated For Virginia

Board Sees Need for Action on Liquor Shipments.

Richmond, May 16 (AP).—The necessity [illegible] convoy to take motor con[illegible] Purse. [illegible]ts of liquors through Virgin[illegible] [illegible]ther wet States has been found by the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Maj. S. Heth Tyler, chairman of the board, said the Virginia A. B. C. authorities have found they have no check on motor transportation of the liquor through Virginia. A bill of lading is not enough, Maj. Tyler said.

He pointed out that there now is no way to prevent a truck with a load of liquor and consignment papers for Florida from delivering the whole load in Virginia, without the knowledge of the board.

The board chairman said he is of the opinion that some kind of a convoy organization will have to be developed. He said it was likely that either the board's inspectors, or possibly the State police may be drafted for convoy duties. They would take charge of a truck at one boarder of the State, and leave it at the other, the major said.

Firemen Fight Flames Behind Wooden Shield

Third Winchester Fire in Five Days Burns Big Antique Shop.

Winchester, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Fire of undetermined origin this afternoon destroyed a large antique furniture shop, damaged an adjacent residence and for a time threatened the northern residential section of Winchester, causing losses unofficially estimated at $10,000.

The blaze started in a building owned by Alvin Shade in which E. J. Yilwig operated an antique furniture repair shop. Flames shooting 100 feet into the air licked over 30 feet to the residence of V. William Estep, which suffered loss estimated at $1,500.

So intense was the heat from the blaze that firemen were forced to throw up barricades of timber to form places of shelter from which they manned nozzles throwing water on the blaze.

Two lengths if hose were burned in two by the heat and only the quick work of firemen in replacing them saved the Estep residence from destruction.

The fire was Winchester's third in five days, the city abattoir having been destroyed last Friday night and several business places in the downtown section of the city Sunday.

Appomattox Park Measure Favored

House Committee to Send Bill to Floor.

The Drewry bill to establish a National park at Appomattox Court House, Va., scene of Lee's surrender to Grant, will be reported favorably to the House today, according to the Associated Press.

Representative Drewry, of Petersburg, the bill's author, was so advised yesterday by Chairman McSwain of the House Military Affairs Committee, to which the measure was referred.

Drewry's proposal would substitute the park for a proposed surrender monument, that drew loud and vehement protests from the South. The earlier measure, passed several years ago, was introduced by the late Representative Harry St. George Tucker, of Lexington.

Liquor Sales Hit $6,000 In Richmond

4 Stores Swamped by 2,400 Customers First Day.

Gin Supply Is Exhausted by Parched Virginia Buyers.

Richmond, May 16 (Spl.).—State liquor business today, the first full $6,000 mark, it was estimated this afternoon by officials of the alcoholic beverage control board, who reported brisk trade at the four Richmond establishments now open.

The rush of initial purchases exhausted the supply of 50-cent gin late today. More is expected in tomorrow. The demand for gin was much greater than forecast in the light of experience in liquor stores outside of Virginia. Business yesterday during only a few hours of operation reached $3,700 or about $150 per hour.

The four stores handled 2,400 customers and dispensed 3,800 different bottles. The stores operated 24 store hours, and during the whole period it was raining briskly.

Gov. Peery today hailed the opening of the State establishments by calling upon the people of Virginia to lend their support to the new A. B. C. code.

"The people of Virginia through the General Assembly has legalized the sale of alcoholic beverages," he said, "and the duty of controlling such sale is vested in the alcoholic beverage control board. People who desire alcoholic beverages are given opportunity to purchase them legally. We feel that it is the duty of all citizens to uphold the law and abide by it.

"There is no legitimate place in our political or economic system for the bootlegger and no patriotic citizen should lend him support by violating the laws of Virginia. Furthermore the buyers of illicit alcoholic beverages is, under the law, equally guilty with the seller.

The warehouse force was busy replenishing stocks depleted by the heavy demand which developed, and an order for 6,500 additional cases—about $150,000 worth—went forward today to replenish the warehouse stocks.

"The straight liquor and 50-cent gin went over in a big way," the store managers reported. One store moved 15 cases of the bottom-priced goods within a few hours.

Arson Blamed In Forest Fire

170 Acres of Brewster Estate Burned Over in Maryland.

Frederick, Md., May 16 (Spl.).—A forest fire which swept 170 acres of land on the estate of Kingman Brewster, of Washington, in the Catoctin Mountain, was termed of incendiary origin by District Forest Warden William G. Renner, who completed an investigation today.

The fire broke out Sunday and raged two days. A number of fire fighters under wardens assisted by about 100 men from the Civilian Conservation Corps fought the flames and saved a lodge.

District Warden Renner said five fires were started on the Brewster estate so that a prevailing breeze would carry them along the valley where the lodge buildings were situated. The fire was not brought under control until about one-fifth of the 891-acre preserve lay blackened.

Mr. Brewster purchased the land from Lawrence Ritchie, executive secretary to former President Hoover, two years ago and spends weekends at the estate, which he has converted into fishing preserves with a lodge and other buildings. It adjoins the west end of the Ritchie estate.

Blazing Liquor Fatal to Man In Auto Crash

Virginian Dies of Burns; Trapped in Flames After Collision.

Norfolk, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Fred Cullom, of East Fairmount Park, was fatally burned, and E. P. Twilley, of Portsmouth, escaped injury yesterday when an automobile operated by Cullom and a truck operated by Twilley collided, and 24 five-gallon jugs of whisky, allegedly in Cullom's car, broke as the car caught fire and flamed up. One five-gallon jug of whisky remained unbroken and was seized by police.

Bystanders told Detective Wright that a torrent of flaming whisky poured from Cullom's car and that Cullom was trapped in the car several minutes, enveloped in flames. Wright said a man named Gay, who lives on Reservoir avenue near the scene of the accident, hauled Cullom from the flaming machine, sustaining severe burns.

Cullom died last night at a hospital.

Danville, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Decision of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to permit farmers to reduce their tobacco crop 20 per cent instead of 30 per cent will mean $800,000 more in the pockets of the farmers in this market next season, on the basis of sales for the past season, it is announced here by John S. Meade, president of the Danville Tobacco Association.

It will mean the selling here of 4,000,000 more pounds of tobacco than was anticipated.

Nats' Pitching and Hitting Rag... s Reds Win Exhibition, 7 to 5

Pound Vance But Bow to Rookie

Prim and Burke Take Knocks; Hafey Slams Long Home Run.

500 Cheer Bottomley's Base-Clearing Triple; Kress Bats 1.000.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 16.—A new low in the fortunes of the Nats was observed here today when they lost a 7-to-5 exhibition game to the Cincinnati Reds, who are operating under the management of Larry MacPhail with such success in the National League that they will soon be known hereabouts as the MacPhailures.

The Nats rid themselves of some very shoddy pitching and some very inopportune hitting here today before proceeding to Cleveland tomorrow to attend to some very pressing American League business.

They met up with Dazzy Vance, the old Brooklyn Dodger, who escaped with his life in the first inning by his ability to dodge the base-hits that rained about him, but after that the Nats subsided passively before the pitching of Ted Kleinhans, a left-handed lad the Reds bought from the Phillies this morning.

Prim Fails to Puzzle.

The eighth place Reds hacked away against Ray Prim to bring the Nats' 3-0 lead down to 4-2 proportions by the sixth with the help of Hafey's homer over the left field wall and then they took advantage of Bobby Burk's presence on the mound to win the ball game in the seventh with a three-run uprising.

It was all done very simply. They filled up the bases on bunts toward Burke and Travis, and then Jim Bottomley varied the tactics by whacking a triple to the right field corner that sent the three runs cascading across the plate.

All of 500 persons saw Kleinhans hold the Nats in subjection with seven hits after he relieved Vance in that first inning when hits by Myer, Manush, Cronin and Stone shelled the old Dazzler out of the box.

Among the important items of the game was Red Kress' first appearance at bat for the Nats. He smacked a single into right field to raise his Washington batting average from 0.000 to 1.000.

Levinsky Found In Hospital Bed

"Nervous Breakdown" Is Fighter's Complaint.

Chicago, May 16 (U.P.).—King Levinsky was found today in a hospital complaining of a "nervous breakdown" and promising to return to Los Angeles to meet Art Lasky, Minneapolis, as soon as he re-

Levinsky was scheduled to meet Lasky in a 10-round bout at Los Angeles last night, but he and his sister-manager, Mrs. Lena Levy, disappeared several days before the bout.

"King is a sick boy. I wouldn't let him go in the ring when he isn't fit," said Mrs. Levy. "As soon as he gets well he'll return to Los Angeles and fight Lasky. We've fought Dempsey, Sharkey, Paulino, Baer, Loughran, Carnera and all the tough ones. Why should we be afraid of Lasky."

Tech Downed By Western Nine, 11-5

Wynne's Homer Is Big Blow; Loveless Stars as Relief Hurler.

WESTERN HIGH SCHOOL'S heavy-hitting baseball team battered a trio of Tech High pitchers for a dozen hits yesterday in an interhigh game at Eastern Stadium to pound out an 11-to-5 victory and clinch third place in the final standings of the interhigh series.

A home run to left in the third by big Huck Wynne, slugging Western catcher, tied the score after Tech had taken a three-run lead in the opening inning. The Georgetown nine was never headed thereafter, climaxing its drive with a five-hit, six-run assault in the eighth to put the game away.

Wynne connected for a pair of timely singles, in addition to his homer, in fie trips to the plate, driving in seven runs. "Specs" Elgin, Tech starting pitcher was relieved by Liggett in the sixth. Liggett was driven off the mound in the eighth. Red Mullock, Western southpaw, was knocked out of the box in the sixth and Ed Loveless took the relief assignment to pitch two-hit ball for the remainder of the game.

Woodbine 13-6 Victor In Tri-County League

Frederick, Md., May 16 (Spl.).—Woodbine, Carroll County, set back Frederick in the Tri-County League at Cadet Field, 13 to 6. Bell held Frederick scoreless until the seventh inning, when a walk and four singles yielded three runs. Three more were added in the next frame on three singles and a triple. Woodbine took the lead in the first game and held it throughout the game. The victory put Woodbine on even terms with Walkersville for first place in the Southern division pennant race.

Reds Trade Johnson, Moore To Phils in 5-Player Deal

CINCINNATI, May 16 (AP).—Avowedly hunting new talent for the flagging Reds, the Cincinnati Baseball Club today announced a two-for-three swap with the equally lowly Phillies.

Sylvester Johnson, acquired this year from the Cardinals, was sent to the Quaker City, along with Johnny Moore, outfielder obtained from the Cubs last year in the trade that gave Chicago the volatile Babe Herman. In return, the Reds got two outfielders, Wes Schulmerich and Art Ruble, who played with Detroit for a time; and Ten Kleinhans, a former Southern Association southpaw.

Cincinnati fandom refused to be enthused, however, waiting instead to see what the effect will be on a team General Manager Larry MacPhail insists is a whole lot better than the record thus far would indicate.

The deal followed a declaration by MacPhail that Bob O'Farrell is not on the managerial spot because of the poor showing the Reds have made and that more money would be expended to bolster the club.

There were hopes, that Schulmerich might add that last little touch of batting punch that has cost the Reds many games thus far. With Boston before joining the Phillies, Schulmerich generally has been rated as a hitter, clipping .318 in 126 games last year, Ruble, too, an American Association veteran, has shown some prowess, batting .376 in seasons with Toledo and Minneapolis, where he attracted Philadelphia attention.

Kleinhans went to the Cubs from Atlanta, and thence to Philadelphia in the Chuck Klein deal. He had a record of 19 won and 13 lost in the Southern Association last year.

Winooka Loses By a Nose at Churchill

Australian Champion, in 1934 Debut, Beaten by Ebony Lady, 18-1.

CHURCHILL DOWNS RACE TRACK, Louisville, Ky., May 16 (AP).—Winooka, the much-heralded Australian champion, made his debut here this afternoon, but it was anything but an auspicious one. At the finish of the 6-furlong Antipodes Purse, he was a nose behind an American filly, Ebony Lady, from the Rookwood Farm stable. Just a neck behind the invader was the Everglade stable's Dartle.

Turning into the straightaway, Winooka appeared as easy victor, but he was laboring at the finish as Ebony Lady overtook him in the last 20 yards. To many observers it seemed that he disliked the going, described as slow, but others stamped him as short and hardly up to the bruising race which he encountered. None was willing to condemn him entirely for his defeat.

Dartle set the early pace, with Winooka snugly in pursuit. In the straightaway the Australian ran down Dartle, but could not withstand Ebony Lady's rush on the outside.

Winooka was a 1-to-2 shot, but by one of those strange quirks of the mutuels, paid 7-to-10 to place. Ebony Lady, lightly regarded, paid $37.80 for $2.

The time of the race, 1:13 2-5, was considered excellent in view of the going.

Charles Town Track Ready For Meet Starting May 28

Course and Plant Improved and Redecorated; Races for All Types of Horses Planned; Eight Events Listed Saturdays and Holidays.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.).—The Shenandoah Valley Jockey Club has announced that everything is in readiness for the opening of its summer meeting at Charles Town on May 28. Considerable work has been done to the plant this spring and horsemen and racegoers will find a greatly improved track when they visit Charles Town.

After the winter storms it was found necessary to regrade and level the track, which was done at considerable expense. The footing is now firm and solid and a new top dressing of sand has been placed on the track. The Charles Town track now compares favorably with any in this section of the country.

The big approximate odds board directly in front of the grand stand has been removed to the infield and an unobstructed view of the backstretch now can be had from the lawns.

Track Redecorated.

A top dressing of blue stone chips has been spread on the lawns in front of the clubhouse enclosure and grandstand. The inner and outer rails have been reset and repainted and the roads leading into the course graded and put in excellent shape.

The hill which obstructed the view of the horses at the first turn has been removed and the buildings and stables facing the grand stand at the upper end have been painted. In fact, the whole plant has been gone over and everything is in readiness to hoist the flags for the opening day's sport.

The "daily double," which proved so popular at the December meeting, again will be featured and, in order to enable racegoers to get a good line on their choices, the club has arranged to have the race programs sold by boys at the Camden Station in Baltimore and the Union Station in Washington.

Mortimer Mahoney will have the same efficient crew that was employed at Bowie and Pimlico on hand to serve those who patronize the mutuel machines. There will be special windows for those who wish to wager on the "daily double."

Edward Brennen has compiled conditions for the races for the first six days and the book will be ready for distribution among the horsemen some day this week. On the opening day, the feature will be the Inaugural Handicap, and on Decoration Day a purse of $500 will be added to the feature race. There will be another handicap on Saturday, the Shenandoah Valley. This race s over a distance of ground. Brennan has arranged his races to suit all sorts of horses, with the last two races every day over a route. On Saturdays and holidays the program will be made up of eight races.

A special train will leave Camden Station, Baltimore, every day at 10:55 and from Union Station in Washington at 12 noon. This tran wll also stop at Rockville, a suburb of Washington, both going and coming.

Augusta Cadet Nine.

Staunton, Va., May 16 (Spl.).—Augusta Military Academy defeated its ancient rival, Staunton Military Academy here this afternoon, 11 to 6. Daugherty, starting pitcher for Augusta, struck out six men in first two innings, but weakened in the third. Robertson, speedball pitcher, went to the mound and allowed Staunton only 3 scattered hits and 1 run, striking out 11 for the remainder of the game.

Hitchcock, Staunton shortstop, got three singles and a triple to lead the hitters, while Bibbs, Augusta center fielder, collected a triple and two singles in five trips. Clark collected a triple and single.

This Morning

With Shirley L. Povich.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 16.—Browsing about Cincinnati today, poking his way into old haunts, was Mine Host Buck Herzog, who chaperoned the Nats West last night as an official of the B. & O. (advertisement), reliving in his mind's eye those torrid days of two decades ago when his name was synonymous with second base on the Giants, Reds and Cubs.

Mine Host Herzog is teetering on the brink of 50 now, 27 years spanning the present and that fateful summer day in New York when the lad who was to captain the Giants for nine seasons was tossed out on his ear as a gate-crasher and finally had to buy his way, into the ball park for two-bits in order to report to John McGraw as the Giants' new second baseman from Reading.

Buck's a railroad executive now, that slick pompadour still very much intact, but the blond glint dulled by broad streaks of gray. But there isn't 10 pounds difference in the still wiry frame of Mine Host and the belligerent Buck, who was in the thick of the National League warfare back in the rough-and-ready era when the gleam of spikes lighted up the infields like fireflies on a prairie.

Mine Host Herzog was the pride of Reading in the old Tri-State League back in '07 when McGraw picked him up for $600, which put Buck in the same money class as Ty Cobb, who was purchased by Detroit from Augusta for that amount. The Minor leaguers had to buy their own bats in those days and thus it was that Buck appeared at the Polo Grounds pass gate, with two bats in hand, to report to McGraw.

"I'm Herzog, the Giants' new second baseman from Reading," little Buck told the gatekeeper. That worthy took one look at the slender lad with his two bats and uttered the equivalent of "scuh-ram. That's a new way to crash the gate. Smart Alex, vamoose." It cost Buck a quarter to buy his way into the bleachers and report to McGraw after the game for a uniform they did not take away from him for nine years.

Buck was the second baseman on those immortal Giant teams of the era, playing behind the great Matty and breaking into the line-up regularly during that 1908 season when the Giants and the Cubs came down to the end of the pennant race in a tie, necessitating the play-off that that the Cubs won.

That defeat of Mathewson by the Cubs was no fault of Matty's, Herzog maintains. If Cy Seymour, the Giants' center fielder, had followed Matty's instructions, the Giants would have been the winner, 2 to 1, instead of the losers by a score of 4-2. Tinker was at bat in the fifth when Matty waved Seymour back toward the fence with his glove. Seymour retreated, but not far enough, and he barely got his glove-tips on the triple that Tinker smacked over his head.

A witness to that game was Al Schacht, who climbed the fence from the elevated tracks late in the afternoon, after pitching Public, School No. 42 to the baseball championship of New York City.

Mine Host Buck says the ball teams generally are better these days, but he excepts the pitchings

Okapi Wins Belmont Featur[illegible] Mrs. Dodge Sloane's String of Victories

7-to-1 Shot Up in Fast Finish

15,000 See Brookmeade Horse Well Ridden by Mack Garner.

Kawagoe Is Second and High Glee Third in Toboggan Race.

NEW YORK, May 16 (AP).—Dominating the American turf as few owners have in recent years, Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan, owner of the great 3-year-olds, Cavalcade and High Quest, today added another victory to her long list of triumphs when Okapi won the Toboggan Handicap for the second straight year at the opening of Belmont Park.

The 4-year-old stablemate of the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness winners sped down the 6 furlongs of the Widener straightaway in 1:10 3-5, to leave behind 14 of the fastest sprinters ever gathered together for one race.

Large Crowd Attends.

An estimated crowd of 15,000, the largest opening day attendance in many years at the opening of America's "Newmarket," saw "Uncle" Mack Garner bring the son of Eternal out of the pack one-eighth of a mile from home and then drive on to a clean-cut victory.

A half length back, closing like a whirlwind, was George D. Widener's 3-year-old Kawagoe. Third portion of the purse went to C. V. Whitney's High Glee, while John Simonetti's Derby horse, Sergt. Byrne, was fourth.

Kawagoe went to the post the 5-to-1 choice in a wide-open betting affair, but there were many who strung along with the Sloane luck at 7 to 1. Mrs. Sloane's share of the purse amounted to $3,250.

It took one of Garner's smart rides to keep Okapi free from interference at the start, as at least a half-dozen horses, including Mrs. H. C. Phipp's Slapdash and the well-backed Ladysman, from W. R. Coe's stable, were knocked out of contention when George Cassidy released the barrier.

Earl Steffen quickly took Mrs. John D. Hertz's Pairbypair to the front, but High Glee, with Eddie Litzenberger in the saddle, was close behind, forcing a burning pace. Meanwhile, "Uncle" Mack (was content to let Okapi settle into his stride on the outside of the field.

At the half-mile pole Pairbypair was still in front but he suddenly quit and High Glee took command. By this time, however, Garner's strategy had begun to tell and Okapi, packing 13 pounds more than he carried to victory last year, was in second place, only a head back of the flying Whitney filly.

Responds to Whip.

A furlong from home Garner went to the whip and, like his famous stablemates, Okapi answered the call by driving forward with a burst of speed that left the others fighting for second money. High Glee weakened in the final strides as Jimmy Hunter brought Kawagoe up fast to take the place.

Back of the three leaders in order trailed Sergt. Byrne, Pairbypair, Good Advice, Gentle Knight, Quel Jeu, Ladysman, Tick On, Universe, Bonanza, Brandon Mint, Slapdash and Scotch Gold.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al: Belmont Park, May 16.

Just what we are going to do about this Mrs. Sloane and her Brookmeade Stable, I do not know. Not satisfied with a Florida Derby, a Preakness and a Kentucky Derby, she had trainer Bob Smith send Okapi to the post here today. Under a masterful ride by the ancient Mack Garner, Okapi closed a gap as wide as Pennsylvania avenue to win the Toboggan Handicap. Possibly, Mrs. Sloane would agree some day to running a race right out of her own stable. I'd like to see a meeting of Cavalcade, High Quest, Okapi and some of the others in her string. I notice that Niggertoe shows in the Hagerstown entries. I don't know whether or not Clocker Mike will pick him, but I'm [illegible]in' you. BILL.

First race—Cheka appears to be a standout in the opener. He showed an excellent effort at Jamaica. The bookies probably will pay off in cigarette coupons, however. Back Fence and Ogie appear to have an edge on the others.

Second race—Blue Again has plenty of sprinting speed, according to the workouts, and is primed to take care of a group of this calibre. Dreel shapes up as the most likely to press the top one. Glendye for the show end.

Third race—The Immortal II, the big imported disappointment, has had time to become acclimated now. Showed a flash of speed at Bowie and may be ready to step down over the short route. Proud Girl and Identify for the other portions of the purse.

Fourth race—Fairene is the Bennings pick to run the legs off this compact field. True, Spy Hill will not have Cavalcade or High Quest to deal with, but the Greentree star will have all he can handle in the top fellow. Burgoo King for the show.

Fifth race—All Aflame is regarded as a youngster with a bright future. Might step out of the maiden ranks. Col. Greene and Sailor Beware are also recommended by the clockers. Fake, after living up to his name in Maryland, may awake.

Sixth race—Village Vamp, Integrity and Major General is the way I prefer them in the finale.

NIGHT SPRITE broke very fast and was sent to the front with a rush. He opened a wide lead, saved ground all the way, and just staggered home. PRECURSOR worked his way up, closed with a rush, and would have won a few more strides. WARD-IN-CHANCERY ran a splendid race. He ran over a track that he did not like. GARDEN MESSAGE, kept out in the middle of the track, had no excuse. POMPONIUS closed a big gap. RED JOHN beat a lot of tired horses.

J. E. Widener declared to win with Arc Light.

AMAGANSETT was well ridden. He was allowed to rate along off the fast early pace, assumed lead going into last half mile, drew away, and won nicely in hand. ROCKY RUN, under a rush with a run, fought well, showed good speed, and was next best. BENEDICTINE trailed far back for a mile and a half and finished with a rush. ARC LIGHT was well up all the way. He ran as if short. LOUIS D'OR ran good race. ARIES fell at the ninth jump and BUSHRANGER fell at the tenth fence.

OKAPI got away well and kept in the middle of the track in early part, came over to the inside in stretch and won under a drive. KAWAGOE, out in the middle all the way, closed very fast and would have won with a stronger ride. HIGH GLEE, cautious as an Eastern boy, broke fast, showed good speed, and held on gamely. SERGEANT BYRNE closed a big gap. PAIRBYPAIR showed good early speed. LADYSMAN was caught in a jam just after the start, but finished gamely.

Hagerstown Races to D.C. Horses

Tody West and Baby Rox, Capital-Owned, Victors at Half-Mile Track.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., May 16.—Washington shared honors with Maryland and Virginia stables in the second day of the racing meet here, with District horses winning two races.

Tody West, owned by G. F. Cook, Washington, won the second race, breaking on top and leading all the way to pay $10.30, while Baby Rox, from the W. A. Smithson Stable, Washington, copped the third to pay the nice odds of $23.20. Baby Rox went on top soon after the break, yielded it momentarily to Steelton, but again near the end to win by a neck.

The Maryland winners were both favorites. In High broke on top in the sixth, one of the two feature races of the day, and never was headed, while Fife, which won yesterday, led all the way again today to win easily the final race. Repeal, owned by Mrs. E. A. Smith, of Washington and which was one of the favorites in the betting, finished third.

Virginia Horses Win.

Virginia-owned horses won the fourth and fifth races, Runwin, owned by Claude Feltner, winning in a driving finish to pay the best price of the day, $24.20. The Gen, the favorite, was given a weak ride. Benish Way, formerly owned by F. H. Smith, of Washington, who sold him for $20,000 to the Seagram Brothers, Canada, several years ago, broke on top in the fifth and won easily. George C. Brenton, of Virginia, the owner, was presented the W. J. E. J. Cup.

The odd race, the first, was won by a New York stable with Miss Meritic, breaking on top and staying there.

trast to the opening day's rain, but Today's weather was ideal, in contrast the track was heavy. It was expected that the track would dry out considerably and the strip will likely be good tomorrow.

Clay Martin Coaches.

Elkins, W. Va., May 16 (Spl.). Clay Martin, well-known Elkins athlete, has accepted appointment as head basket ball coach and assistant football coach at the Spencer High School.

Last season Martin was football and basket ball coach at Burnsville High School.

This Morning:

Lefty Grove is the only modern-day potcher he classes with Mathewson, Johnson, Brown, Ruelbach and McGinnity. But the infielders of his day didn't have that lively ball to contend with.

The boys are more polite than they used to be, too, opines Buck, who recalls that day during that play-off series between the Giants and the Cubs when Iron Man Joe McGinnity walked up to the plate and tore the bat away from Manager Frank Chance, of the Cubs, preventing the Cubs from getting their hitting practice before the game.

When Matty was good they couldn't touch his fadeaway, says Buck, and he points out one game when the Phillies didn't get even a foul off Mathewson, who won a 1-to-0 game in 59 minutes with only one ball used throughout.

The customer is always right with Mine Host Herzog, whose company transports all the big league clubs, so Buck graciously declines to pick any team to win the pennant. He straddles the issue by fearlessly declaring that the club that wins will know it has been in a fight.

Radio Waves and Ripples

LARRIE BUSLER and Geraldine Jones are planning on getting married tomorrow night. It's to be just a simple wedding in the home of the bride's mother on Second street northeast.

But at the simplest of weddings, there ought to be music befitting the occasion. Larrie and Geraldine know that. That's why they wrote a letter to Reg Newton, WOL's song and piano man.

So when you hear Reg playing the Lohengrin wedding march tomorrow night and singing "I Love You Truly" you'll know the Jones-Busler nuptials are on. And when you hear the wedding march the second time you'll know the knot's tied.

The time is 7 p. m.—Newton's regular Friday night spot—which was just right for Larrie and Geraldine.

THIS is what we think the trade, the newspaper trade, would call out the sob sisters for, the sort of thing that, if prepared in just the right tear-in-every-line manner, should cause the happy apparition of mounting circulation figures to cross the mind's eye of most of the trade's managers.

It is the story of unemployed actors and of the efforts that are being made in their behalf to return them to employment via the Government's CCC camps.

It is the story of Otis Skinner and Eva LeGallienne and Peggy Wood and some of the others who are going on the air from WMAL tonight at 9:30, while the less fortunate members of their profession try to sell official Washington and its press on the idea of buying $600,000 worth of their idle talents for the CCC boys by playing "The Patsy" to them in the National Press Club.

Rumors that Lanny Ross' imminent departure from radio has passed the "vacation" stage and has become more inclusive than N. B. C.'s Show Boat, his present affiliation, are now being bandied about in the "news" that comes from press agents.

Lanny says good-by to the Show Boat tonight, but stays to do a guest artist with Mary Lou and Conrad Thibault on another N. B. C. show tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, before taking "leave of absence" for Hollywood and a successor production to his "Melody in Spring," now current at the Earle.

Something may come of this, a nonprofessional Washington civic orchestra with a regular schedule of concerts and radio broadcast, probably.

It so happens that Bailey F. Alart and the people who have charge of the Community Civic Orchestra have succeeded in assembling 75 musicians, the bulk of whom are amateurs, with only a scattering of professional support.

Mr. Alart, who is the conductor, would like to see 125 pieces in his organization.

Wanting to help, WJSV has scheduled the orchestra for three classical and light classical programs May 24, May 31 and June 5, all from 9:30 to 10 p. m.

WRC's mail department thinks Mother's Day and all that it implies is fine, but that one can, after all, go a little too far with it. For instance, Mrs. Carl Wolf, of Plainville, Mass., who wrote:

"Will you please deliver the following message to Mrs. E. W. Olson, Fort Mills, Philippine Islands: 'Gertrude had a son on the 13th, both mother and baby well. Birthday greetings from home for Clara.'"

If any of you get over by the Philippines this summer you might tell Clara about Gertrude.

There's a great night ahead for Tin Pan Alley, and a great night, too, for the alley's customers of the radio. We speak of next Tuesday midnight, when Columbia takes a program for the Authors' League Fund.

There will be George Gershwin, Billy Hill, Rudy Vallee, Arthur Schwartz, Sigmund Romberg, Dana Suesse, Harry Armstrong, Harold Arlen, Herman Hupfel, Ferde Grofe, Jean Schwartz, Dorothy Fields, Jimmy MacHugh, Richard Rogers, Harry Warren and J. Rosamund Johnson, all playing or singing one of their own pieces. And if that doesn't satisfy, the Casino de Paris Orchestra will play from Sousa, Herbert and Nevin, while an announcer introduces Mrs. John Philip Sousa, Mrs. Ella Herbert Bartlett and Mrs. Ethelbert Nevin.

Getting Personal . . .

Note to realtors from Charles J. V. Murphy, manager of KFZ, Columbia Broadcasting System, Little America outlet: "An advantage of living in the Antarctic is the fact that at this time of the year we don't have to worry about where we're going to spend our summer vacation" . . . and a caution to crooner haters from Nick Lucas: "I don't see why these soft-voiced radio singers object to being called 'crooners.' By any other name they'd still be that. I've been a 'crooner' for years, ever since I started recording before radio came into its own, and I'd put up a pretty stiff fight if any one tried to take that label from me" . . . and a pronunciamento, or something, from Col. (Budan-holler) Stoopnagle: "What this country needs is a good 5-cent cigar without the scent." . . . Rosa Ponselle's first singing was done at the age of 5 in a church choir . . . at 9 she was singing solos . . . and at 14 she turned professional to play the piano and sing illustrated songs in a Meriden, Conn., movie house. . . . Irving Kaufman, the C. B. S. "Lazy Dan" minstrel, is wearing black face for the first time in years this week . . . he is having some character pictures made.

Irene Beasley, the long tall gal from Dixie, who recently took up with Phil Baker for N. B. C. broadcasting Friday nights, adjusts a shoe strap.

Whitecaps.

WRC—Lanny Ross leaves the "Show Boat," Muriel Wilson sings gems from the "Merry Widow," 8 p. m.; Nikita Balieff, Deems Taylor, Helen Jepson and Lee Wiley with Paul Whiteman, 9 p. m.; Pappy, Ezra, Zeke and Elton, the Westchester Hillbillies, in Washington, 10:15

WMAL—Otis Skinner, Eva Le Gallienne and Peggy Wood for the idle actors, 9:30 p. m.; a musical from the White House, first in radio history, 10:35 p. m.; Don Bestor's Orchestra, 11 p. m.

WJSV—Opening broadcast of the Vadsox, Norway, station, the world's northernmost aircasting point, 1:30 p. m.; "Raffles" again at large, 7:30 p. m.; Fred Waring, 8:30 p. m.

Although the humming bird is most frequently seen flying about flowers, presumably gathering nectar for food, this is by no means its chief source of food. The humming bird eats more meat than anything else—insect life is its chief item of diet. Some naturalists have shown that flowers attract humming birds not alone for the nectar, but for the insects which are around the flowers.

Some humming birds seldom, or never go near flowers, feeding instead upon insects which live on the under surface of leaves. Investigation even among flower-frequenting species has shown that their alimentary canal normally contains many insects, and only traces of honey.

All of the children of the Cassiani family of Philadelphia were born in different countries. Only the parents have birthplaces in common. And now all except one sister live in the United States, where none of them was born. The sister, born in Turkey, lives in Germany.

Strange as it seems, a single wolf stalked Western cattle herds, killing $25,000 worth of stock before he was finally killed by a member of the U. S. Biological Survey's force of hunters. On some nights the wolf killed a dozen or more animals, seemingly just for the taste of blood.

BLACKIE BEAR

Good News of Good Crops "Down on the Farm"

The next morning after breakfast Blackie was sitting out on the porch smoking, or rather he had been trying to smoke, but every time he lit his pipe it would go out in a minute or two, because he forgot to draw his breath so as to keep the fire alive. As soon as he would take a puff or two, he would take his pipe out of his mouth and would sit and look away off like he was thinking mighty hard about something, and then he would grin and stick his pipe back in his mouth, but it wouldn't smoke, because it had gone out. He did this three or four times, and was just calling Benny to bring him another match when he saw Jay Bird coming.

Blackie laid his pipe down and began to grin when he saw Jay Bird, for somehow he thought that he was bringing good news. And he wasn't disappointed. Jay Bird, too, was looking mighty well pleased, as he settled down on the watershelf beside Blackie. He took a drink of water, flapped his wings, and said:

"I have had a mighty nice trip. I spent the night with Joe Reet, and I never saw any better sunflower seeds than he had for supper. He asked me lots about you folks, and he told me lots about the other folks and things down on Bear Creek. One thing he told me that I already knew was that Uncle Joe had more good things to eat than any man and woman could possibly use.

"Yes, sir," Jay Bird said, "I had already been to Uncle Joe's house, and he certainly has a lot of things about his place—more than he has ever had before. There are chickens running all over his place, and the ducks and pigs and geese and turkeys are a sight. And he has just dug his potatoes and put them up in big banks out in the garden, and his trees are right full of the prettiest red apples you ever saw. And the old walnut tree is so full of walnuts that the limbs are breaking. Yes, sir, it looks like living at Uncle Joe's house, and I really believe he has enough to spare some to Blackie Bear and his friends."

After Jay Bird got through telling all this good news, Blackie didn't say a word for a minute or two, but just sat and smoked and smoked. Then he said: "Jay Bird, it's a funny thing how I have been sitting here just seeing all those things at Uncle Joe's before you came and told me about them. I have an awful hunger for some of those low-country eatables and then, too, Bettie has been talking about wanting a sheepskin coat for the winter. Did the wool look nice and long?" And when Jay Bird told him how beautiful the wool was, Blackie told him to go on down to the pond and help the children fish while he smoked out some plans.

Walt Mason, Himself

Helping the Sick.

My neighbor, Jimpson, had the mumps, and feared that he might bump the bumps. His aunts looked worried as they went, about their household tasks, intent, and people journeyed to his door, well knowing he was sick and sore, and not disposed to talk a streak, since he was fidgety and weak. I saw the long processions wend to comfort this poor ailing friend; old dames who took some healing dope that might inspire the man with hope; old gents with yarns they wished to tell of dying friends who once got well; and there were also dippy males who carried sympathy in bales, and lovely damsels loaded down with nosegays gathered in the town. They all were bent on doing good, on spreading sunshine where they could; but I remarked to my Aunt Jane, "Such guests would give my neck a pain; when one has measles, mumps or croup, he hates to entertain a group; he's anxious to be left alone, where he may weep and swear and groan. So I won't teeter to his door; I'll send him books and then some more." I sent him many breezy books concerning sleuths and crime and crooks, and when he'd ceased to be a wreck he came and wept upon my neck. "There ought to be a law," he said, "to make the bores avoid one's bed, when he is bunged up with disease, including grip and housemaids' knees."
